A singular occurrence strikingly showing the powerful effect of ice in rending rocks, was lately related by Herr Bergh. An extensive promontory in western Norway was, in 1717, deluged with water during a thaw, filling every crevice in the rock A severe cold quickly followed, suddenly freezing the water and bursting the mass of rock, which was projected from a height of 1500 feet into the neighboring fiord, which engulfed the entire promontory with its cultivated fields and farmstead. The fall cause I a huge wave in the fiord, within a distance of two miles and a half, but also carried away a church which had stood fifty feet above the water a mile away from the promontory. Of the latter only a low ledge now remains.
