Mr. John Macdonald took opportunity to express his regret that things should have been said to the effect that Toronto eontended that the true interests of the dominion's two great cities were at bottom identical. He paid a high compliment to the push and energy which had brought the Grand Trunk up to its present high standard of efficiency. But there was more to be done, and he believed it was more to be done, and he believed it was more to be done, too. Some day, and it might be at no very distant date either, they might be surprised to hear that arrangements had been made for the Grand Trunk loop line north of the city, a change which would mean a good deal.

Dr. Goldwin Smith was called for. He said he represented neither commerce nor railways, but he must make due acknowl.

He knew how it was in days gone by: he had traveled on the top of an old country stage coach on a rainy day, with the water from an old lady's umbrella running down his back. Also, he had suffered what the diligence of continental Europe could do for a man, keeping him plached up with his knees about touching his chin, for thirty six hours at a stretch. For elegance and comfort he did not see how the palace cars

We call special attention to his advertisement in to-day's columns.
