The rubber business in common with all other lines feels the paralyzing effects of the anarchist strikes and rioting in connection with the railroad troubles. Of course these troubles cannot long continue but no one can tell to what extent the destruction will go before the common sense of the people asserts itself and the rule of law is restored. Every strike and interruption of wage earnings means just so much taken from the purchasing power of the people and so much loss of general business. While the troubles continue dealers are more cautious than ever about buying. In spite of this drawback, however, the detailed orders are coming for rubbers in good volume and the companies are all working full time with a view to getting as much of product as possible delivered before the time limit for the extra discount.
