

the very best I can to keep that in mind and to treat all hon. members in a fair and equal way, and I shall certainly try to do that.

If the hon. member is having difficulty in discussions with any party in the House, I invite him to seek out members of whatever party it is and to have discussions. If the hon. member has a complaint that, for whatever reason, he or others are not being allowed a fair chance to express themselves in this House, I invite the hon. member and any other member to come and see me, and I will deal with it as best I can.

The hon. member actually rose on a point of privilege. It is probably a point of order. I have explained that I had to deal with that matter many months ago. The hon. member has risen again and I have at least allowed him to say something which perhaps he ought to take up in some other way with ministers or with his colleagues.

I am going to proceed with Routine Proceedings.
