
A
L E T T E R
T O T H E
People of ENGLAND.

L E T T E R II.

IN all Governments constituted like this of which you have the good Fortune to be born Members, where the Legislative Power is the Peoples Right, and the Executive belongs to the King, indeed, wherever it is of the mixed Kind, it is impossible from the changeable Nature of all human Institutions, but the Balance which ought to be preserved between the Prince and the Subject must be destroyed, and the Scale preponderate sometimes on one side, and sometimes on the other.

B

How-