"Don't you consider the 'shoulder' upon the modern stick a mistake?"
"Yes, decidedly so; it came in with the 'overhand throw.' It certainly made it overhand throw. It certainly made it easier to the beginner, but it alway seemed to me quite as bad as the bagged netting of the old Beaver club. It is certainly more effective in checking, but a crowbar would be still more so. The fact that over 10,000 of the popularity of the game, and public opinion must become one of its legislators. There is no danger of the dash and vim of the game disappearing if we enforce the laws which exist, but there is every danger of its respectability disappearing if we permit the license to rough play which characized many of our best matches of late years. The growing unpopularity of the Rugby The growing unpopularity of the Rugby game of football in England and its replacement by the Association rules indicates a desire to free field sports from unnecessary "Do you think that the laws of lacrosse should be amended?"

"No; the laws of the game do not want any tinkering for some time to come, but players need to understand better what the existing laws mean, and in public matches experienced referees for a season or two would do the rest. Penalties may be made effective, but mutual understanding and a desire to develop science, rather than brute force, are better than all the penal laws that ingenuity can devise. The association should insist upon teams studying the strict letter of the law, both theoretically and practically. That is the whole trouble. The ields are too small and the play too sharp for twelve men. I think there should be leven men on a side."-Montreal Witness.
