☞ The column of the moon's southing gives the time of high water at Parrsboro', Cornwallis, Horton, Hantsport, Newport, Windsor, Truro, &c.

The cultivation of the soil, together with the improvement of those animals which are given us as aids in the work, is a noble employment, and furnishes the mind with exhaustless subjects of thought. There are two Systems of belief that obtain credence—the one embodies the heaven-given rules to make the moral soil, which Sin has cursed, bring forth nourishment for the more enduring part of man;—the other teaches how to provide with the least toil for the wants of the body—to clothe the most unsightly and barren places with beauty and compel them to add to man's comfort and luxury. Though we are compelled "to eat bread in the sweat of our brow," we are not obliged to gather it by the most laborious process, to eat the earth's most uncultivated products, or to dwell in the most rude and uncomfortable habitations. It is an erroneous idea that improvements will not pay: this, in many instances, is urged merely as an excuse for carelessness and negligence. There are many instances, where improvements have been made, with a greater profit on the money so expended, than is realized in the ordinary routine of farming.
