GREAT STANLEY GOES OVER

that the intrepid Scots missionary and traveler must be found. Beneficent as possessed of a supreme belief in Livingston's life, also two years had elapsed without a sound penetrating the outer world from the unknown interior of the dark continent and persistent rumor told a tale of a lonely and tragic death.

In Livingston's footsteps.

At this time Stanley had never heard of Livingston, but his study of that great and good man's career inspired him with a noble and noble ambition to follow in his footsteps. He first went to Egypt, reporting the opening of the Suez Canal in passing, then visited Constantinople and Jerusalem, crossed into Persia, finally reaching India, and on Oct. 12, 1870, sailed from Bombay for Zanzibar where he arrived early in January, 1871. There he organized an expedition, which he despatched in two parts, he himself traveling with the hindmost, with its immediate objective Ujiji, now forming part of German East Africa. After surmounting difficulties of the middle of April from an Arab trader that Livingston was alive at Ujiji. It was June before he reached Ujiji, and on Nov. 10-1871, The Herald messenger reached Ujiji. Amid the wild and cheering of his followers and the African breeze Livingston's devoted servants and friends escorted him to their master's residence. The meeting has become historic. As the grey weather beaten, fever-stricken messenger, Stanley raised his hat and uttered the memorable words, "Dr. Livingstone, I presume." It was a great triumph for Gordon Bremer and Henry Morton Stanley. For the latter, too, it proved a turning point in his life. He had never thought much of indeed anything about religious things, but the noble simplicity and unaffected piety of Livingston touched a responsive chord. The hazard went in a forward and friendly intercourse with the sturdy and pious Scotsman influenced all the remainder of his life.

Returned to England.

Stanley returned to England in July, 1872; was duly feted and everywhere and marks of honor in November following he brought out the narrative of his wanderings, which he entitled "How I Found Livingstone." He was set out on his second and greatest African expedition on the joint commission of the New York Herald and the Daily Telegraph. Directing his course first to the Victoria Nyansa, which he reached in 1875, circumnavigated that lake and explored the Albert Nyansa region. Returning to Ujiji, he explored Lake Tanganyika, and being undecided whether to solve the problem of the Luabala River or, not fall back on the time-honored custom of tossing a coin, the hazard went in a forward policy, and Stanley embarked on the great river, which he named Livingston, after its discoverer. It took him eight months to descend the mighty stream in canoes, as a result, establishing the connection between the Luabala and the Congo. He touched English soil again in February, 1878, receiving many flattering marks of public favor. On June 28 the French government presented him with the cross of the Legion of Honor. His travels were told in his book, called "Across the Dark Continent."

Another chapter in Stanley's life was opened. Leopold, king of the Belgians, had determined to aid with his great private fortune in the commercial development and civilization of the rich region that the traveler had passed. After vainly endeavoring to enlist the British government in the task, Stanley engaged to prove to the king that all he had said of the Congo was true in deed and truth. The International African Association was formed and Stanley was entrusted with the task of carrying out its objects. For six months he labored, and by June, 1878, he had established his conviction that the Congo natives were susceptible of civilization, and that the Congo basin was rich enough to repay exploitation." During 1885 and 1886, Stanley was engaged with Sir William Mackinnon and James F. Hutton of Manchester, involving the interests of British commerce in East Africa, one of which developed into the British East Africa Company, while the other, The Royal Congo Railway Company, thru the indifference of English capitalists, came to nothing.

His Last Journey.

Stanley's last journey was in some respects the most strenuous and laborious of all his adventures. Its ostensible purpose was the relief of Emin Pasha, who was supposed to be in personal danger somewhere in the equatorial provinces of the Egyptian Sudan. After incredible hardships, Stanley succeeded in ascending the Congo and reaching his destination. He found that Emin desired none of his help and less of his company, and that his expedition had been founded on a complete misunderstanding. On his return to Britain he became involved in a painful controversy connected with the treatment of the rear column of his expedition and its commander, Major Bartlett, who had been assassinated. After recruiting his health in Egypt and the south of France, Stanley returned to London and met with a reception almost regal in its splendor. He was feasted and feted on every side—the Royal Geographical Society bestowed on him a special gold medal, and the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh and Durham conferred on him honorary degrees. On July 12, 1890, with a lambent as a Liberal-Unionist, but was defeated by a small majority. In 1895 he again stood and was this time elected, but was compelled to resign in 1900 on account of his ill-health. In 1888 he visited South Africa as the guest of the British South Africa Company. He spoke at the opening of the railway from the Cape to Bulawayo. During the following year his services in the exploration and opening up of Africa were rewarded by the bestowal of a Knight Commandership of the Bath.

His Character Summarized.

His character has been thus summarized: "Too strong or too arbitrary a man perhaps to be invariably popular with his subordinates, too reserved to be popular in the general acceptance of the word, and gifted with immovable resolution, Stanley possessed a positive

SEARCHING MAIL SHIPS.

London, May 10.—Answering a question in the house of commons to-day, in regard to the recent searching of the mails of the steamer Ostris by the Russian warship Khrabry, the postmaster-general, Lord Stanley, said ordinary postal letters were not contraband of war, but possibly despatches between the government of a belligerent state and its accredited representatives may be so treated. No general rule of international law had been established giving special immunity to mail ships, but the right of search in the case of such vessels should be so exercised as to minimize the inconvenience.

GIRL TRAFFIC IS CHARGED. ST. LOUIS WOMAN JAILED

It is Said She Imported Ten Girls From Germany for Improper Purposes.

St. Louis, May 10.—On complaint of Inspector James R. Dunn of the United States department of commerce and labor, Mrs. Sophia Weinszeit was today arrested and arraigned before a United States commissioner on a charge of importing girls to St. Louis from Europe, and especially from Germany, for improper and unlawful purposes.

The arrest followed the arrival here a week ago, of ten girls from Germany, it is alleged by Dunn that they came to St. Louis in answer to advertisements in foreign papers offering positions with good salary at light housework in St. Louis.

It was these advertisements, it is alleged, which first attracted the attention of the department of labor.

Inspector Dunn states that the girls were taken to Mrs. Weinszeit's home and that proposals were made to them that they engage in improper and unlawful pursuits.

Mrs. Weinszeit was held in $2000 bond, pending a preliminary hearing next Monday. The girls will be taken care of by the federal labor bureau pending the settlement of the case.

The girls come from Munich. They are all without means, according to District Attorney Dyer, and their parents are poor.

Mrs. Weinszeit, who is a native of Bavaria, but who has been in America for ten years, said to-night that she was employed at a restaurant on the Chicago midway, and had charge of German girls who sold refreshments, and who also had been brought from Germany.

She was engaged, she asserted, by a company of St. Louis which has a concession on the Pike, to secure Bavarian girls who could sell refreshments there. Mrs. Weinszeit says that she advertised for the girls in the Munich papers in good faith.

District Attorney Dyer said that under the statutes the steamship company which brought the girls to America, would have to return them.

TO REVIVIFY ROYAL POWERS.

Kingston Medical College to Be Re-organized and Degrees Conferred.

Kingston, May 10.—The Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons is to be revived, with Senator Sullivan, one of the charter members, as president. This corporation has a royal charter, issued in 1866. Since the Queen's Medical College resumed its relation with Queen's the Royal College has been dormant. It is now proposed to revive it and utilize its examining powers in granting fellowships and the degree of F.R.C.P.S. This degree can only be secured on examination of a high standard and a thesis by doctors of five years' standing. Since 1892 the Royal College has conferred one or two degrees, but now it is proposed to thoroughly reorganize it and make it a live corporation.

Dr. R. A. Pyne, medical registrar, said last night that the plan probably contemplated some changes in the faculty. The power to confer degrees it had had always and any "revival" would not have any injurious effect on Toronto's medical institutions thru the degree conferring privilege.
