BRITISH TARS TOAST KING WITH WATER

Navy Said To Be Drying Itself By Pledges and Education.

(New York Tribune.)

British officers are responsible for their navy's going dry and the transition cannot be attributed to religious or ethical propaganda, according to Rear Admiral W. J. Anstey R. N., retired, for many years an attaché of the Admiralty in London, who arrived here yesterday on the Anchor liner Cameronia.

"It was very different when I first became an officer," declared the retired admiral, "for in those days there was heavy drinking. Today the change would surprise one. At the last dinner I attended on one of his majesty's ships which I had the honor to serve, of all the officers who drank the King's toast, only two took port wine. The others voluntarily drank water."

"I do not advocate," he continued, "the imposition of prohibition ideas as propaganda. Scotland will perhaps never go dry, as the word is interpreted in the United States. Now England, for that matter, but there will be, a constant increase in habits of temperance, and that is as it should be. There is much less drinking in the navy among the sailors because of temperance pledges and educational work along those lines."

"We are coming to regard the drink evil in Scotland as something that can best be met by cutting down the hours in which public houses shall operate. It is generally recognized that liquor consumption is deleterious to health. Peary reached the North Pole on tea and Amundsen discovered the South Pole using the same beverage. Abstinence is invoked by participants in sports. Why not in the every day battle of life?"

Admiral Anstey is in this country on business.

GIVE THE WORLD A CHANCE. (New York Tribune.)

It's a rattlertrap old universe, reeling down to ruin, according to the philosophers of gloom. Mr. H. G. Wells sees a chance, a long chance, if only enough folks will read his history and can become educated in time. But—the road is set for disaster. Crisis follows crisis, at each hairpin curve. And the precipice yawns beneath.

Yet, with the aid of the first bright autumn day, who cannot find a little

GIVE THE WORLD A CHANCE. (New York Tribune.)

It's a rattlertrap old universe, reeling down to ruin, according to the philosophers of gloom. Mr. H. G. Wells sees a chance, a long chance, if only enough folks will read his history and can become educated in time. But—the road is set for disaster. Crisis follows crisis, at each hairpin curve. And the precipice yawns beneath.

Yet, with the aid of the first bright autumn day, who cannot find a little cheer in the way the old machine holds the road! Each crisis is the last, on the word of the gloom-boys. Instead, with a rattle and a rumble and a lurch, the world takes each bend handily. It almost seems as if it enjoyed the risks, knew how to swing them, and called for more.

For instance: There is to be no war over Corfu? The Germans are ready to pay; the earthquake was not as terrible as the first rumors portrayed it; there is to be coal for anybody who can afford it. A "perhaps" dances upon each ray of sunshine, but the net effect is warning and invigorating.

Why not give the old world a chance? Isn't it conceivable that it knows more about its own business than even the wisest of philosophers?

A use for old safety razor blades has been found at last. Pickpockets slit pockets with them
