Life in Ottawa

(J. B. Middleton in the Toronto News)

I would not live in Ottawa,

Although I like the place.

And walk with fairy grace.

Although the men are good to me,

And smile with gentle ease,

Although the far Laurentian hills

Speak endless mysteries.

I would not live in Ottawa,

Where Bluebooks are prepared,

Where Tabulated Figures lie

Ere yet they have been aired,

Where countless Civil Servants Add,

Subtract and Multiply.

Where even First-Class Clerks are sad,

And Second Classers sigh.

I would not live in Ottawa,

For feary my polished style

Would bring to Premier Borden's face

A sweet seraphic smile

For fear he'd say: "O, prithee, Bard,

With join our Clerkly force!"

I would not dare refuse a job

From such a lofty source.

And then in clerkly Ottawa

I would be set for aye.

To Add, and Add, and Add

Each long and weary day,

To do Statistical Returns

On Trade and High Finance,

—So would I stunt my brain and get

An Ichthyologic glance.

I would not live in Ottawa

If spite of all its Pull

Its Dinner Dances, and its Style,

Its Churches—seldom full.

Nay, I would be a Calymnist,

A Paragraphic Gent,

Who never has to tabulate

A single copper cent.
