Society constantly at peace with all mankind. Its healing and comforting hand is withheld from no sufferer. Its ministrations are as universal as the anguish of war itself.

Today, once again, the Red Cross Society has taken up its great task. Its ability to carry on its splendid work depends directly upon the support which each and every one of us is able to provide. Not a dollar will be wasted, not a dollar misspent. You cannot make a contribution, large or small, that will not bring direct and welcome relief to someone, some suffering victim of the world's travail. When during this week you are asked to give your assistance to this great and worthy cause, I ask that you do so with generosity, and in the spirit of goodwill.
