

The Journal of Commerce

The Journal of Commerce is one of the oldest commercial journals in Canada. As its name implies, it gives prominence to commercial information, but it by no means confines itself to strictly commercial questions. It makes a specialty of information concerning the production, distribution and marketing of Canadian commodities. It is recognized as a leading authority on commodity markets. It gives accurate, timely and impartial weekly reviews of events in the industrial, commercial and financial world. In its editorial and other columns, it discusses all the interesting problems of the day. It deals with politics, not party politics, but the politics which should and do interest men and women of all parties; the trend of events at home, throughout the Empire and in the neighboring Republic—such notes and comments as are helpful to the reader who desires to keep himself informed on current events. All questions which touch the development of Canada's resources, or that have a bearing on the promotion of the moral or material welfare of the Dominion, fall within the field of the contributors to the Journal's columns, who include many of the ablest thinkers and writers of the day.

The Journal of Commerce is a forward-looking magazine of Canadian questions, aiming to deal with the affairs of today and tomorrow. Its topics are those in which the new generation is interested, the discussion of which is calculated to give a better understanding of Canadian life.
