THE ROYAL PARTY ARRIVES IN LONDON!

Great Crowd of People Poured Into City to Witness Reception to Their Royal Highnesses.

Miles of the Forest City's Streets Are Gaily Decorated With Vari-Colored Flags and Bunting --- Bright Sun Dispelled Threatening Clouds of the Early Morning--- The Civic Address to Royalty.

London the less has been honored by a visit from the heir to the British throne. It is now over 40 years ago since the present King of Great Brit- the 27th St. Clair Borderers. ain arrived in the Forest City, and during those 40 years wonderful changes have taken place. The Prince of Wales in 1860 saw a straggling town, surrounded by much uncleared forest and undeveloped land, and approached in many instances by the corduroy roads of the pioneer days. Today his son gazed upon a modern city, a loyal and a prosperous city. Stirring events have transpired since the youthful prince appeared at the memorable ball in the Tecumseh House. The good Queen mother has passed away and he, with the accumulated years beginning to show on his kingly brow, is reigning in her stead. In 1860 London was a comparatively small community in a sparsely poputrans-continental chain of provinces had not then been forged. Today loyally received by the commercial capital of an important section of a united nation.

The morning broke dismal enough, and at 9 o'clock the bright-colored decorations of the down-town district looked somewhat bedraggled. But the crowds which had been streaming into the city since yesterday were optimistic, and the event proved that their confidence was not misplaced. Shortly before 10 o'clock the skies cleared and the sun came out long enough to dry up the water-soaked flags and bunting. The streets began to fill with people at an early hour, and long before the the streets along the line of the royal procession had been secured. guns, and the cheers of thousands of loyal throats, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of York were greeted in London today. From the moment the royal procession left the Grand Trunk depot until it reached the reviewing stand in Victoria Park, the distinguished visitors were greeted with a continuous ovation. If the reception to the duke's father in 1860 is excepted, such a scene was never before witnessed in London. Overhead, the clouds hung black and threatening, and occasionally a premonitory sprinkle of rain feli; but rain had no effect on the loyal enthusiasm of the crowds. lated colony; the links in the great And such crowds! Through the instrumentality of this humble address we desire to convey our sentiments of loyal attachment to the person and respect for the crown and authority of your royal father, our beloved sovereign, whose visit, in the year 1860, to this young Canadian city is still a pleasing and much cherished memory with many of its inhabitants. At the same time we beg permission to testify our love and esteem of your royal highness' own character and person, which command, both as to public and private virtues, the admiration of the

We are delighted that you have been enabled, even within the brief limit of your visit to this Dominion, to see so much of its great extent and almost illimitable resources of mine and stream, of forest and field; and it is our fervent wish, that you will carry with you from our shores many pleasant remembrances of your journey and that the same may be in all respects as agreeable to yourself and Her Royal Highness the Duchess as you brief visit is to the citizens of London.

A BEAUTIFUL WORK OF ART.

Duke and Duchess Cheered by The Illuminated Civic Address to Duke and Duchess.

> of Arms in Gold and Silver Design.

The civic address presented by Mayor Rumball to their royal highnesses today is one of the most costly and beautiful ever designed in Canada. The entire work of designing and illuminating, together with the gold and silver work, was done by Mr. John S. Barnard, the well-known Dundas street jeweler. The address, which is done on vellum and magnificently bound in leather, bears on the cover the royal coat-of-arms, in solid gold, and the coat-of-arms of the city of London in silver. The coats-of-arms are surrounded by a border of burnished silver, in one corner of which is a spray of wheat, and in the other a spray of clover, both wrought from silver, and emblematic of the fertility of Canada's soil. The right hand lower corner contains a bunch of maple

The address proper, together with the beautiful frontispiece, is exquisitely done in colors, the German text being used. Around each page is a wide border of hand-colored designs of Canadian flowers.

The address is a triumph of the designer's art, and is in all probability the most beautiful and costly received by the royal tourists in Canada.
