Provincial Legislature

Debate Opens on Mr. Smith's Motion Referring to Arbitration.

Most of the Day Spent In Committee on the License Bill.

The sitting of the legislature was largely devoted yesterday to that uninteresting stage of the growth of laws which is called committee work. The liquor license bill took up the bulk of the time, without, however, being finished. Many amendments were suggested, some of them being accepted by the house, while several others were stood over for further consideration. The Jurors Act, which had been so much discussed last winter, went through the committee stage yesterday in but a few minutes, no and the committee stage. This provided for the total committee stage. L. arth of the subject to the subject t their recent enactment and by the appointment of commissioners to mediate in these questions. What was now wanted was that the province should take some such steps too. There was at present an act on the statute book concerning conciliation and arbitration, but that measure was practically of none effect, as its measures could only be brought into operation by the application of both parties to the dispute. In bad cases it was quite useless, and that just when most required. He had confined his resolution to one of general statement, and did so in Stay Three Days in make a definite statement that it the next session of the house they could take some action. Such a statement was all that he required at the present time.

Several suggestions might, however, he made. One of these was that a labor bureau be established by which much useful data and statistics might be collected. Another was the providing of some provision for the incorporation of trade unions. This was possible now under the Dominion laws, but a provincial status was necessary. This would enable the employers of labor to deal with a corporate body, and so Mr. Turner's objection in the former debate with a corporate body, and so Mr. Turner's objection in the former debate were soon safe on board, and at 5:30 the ship got under way for the cruise North.

Numerous calls will be made at northern ports, and Skagway reached on the wasting time; the honorable provincial secretary stayed with his man and prevented him from discussing the motion when adjournment was the question before the house. The debate was then adjourned until Wednesday.

Hon. Mr. McBride then placed a motion upon the table containing a couple of orders-in-council, dated the 5th of March, regarding mining matters.

Upon a question of privilege, Mr. Martin taen undertook to show Attorney-General Eberts that in 1899 the government had introduced night sessions on the second, third and fourth days of the session. Hon. Mr. Turner, however, pointed out that the then government had done so per favor of the opposition, and that when that pressure had been removed for three weeks not a night sitting had been held. Mr. Pooley ended the matter with the reminder across the floor that "chickens come home."

Another matter of privilege was raised from Our Own Corn.

Precedents were to be had from Australia for an act of compulsory arbitration. One had been in force there, and he believed that as a result there had not been a single strike in the past six years. The two big strikes recently troubling this province had both been settled too, by some form of direct government interference, one in one way and the other in another. The public industries and interests should be protected and he hoped that during the recess the matter would be considered by the government with the result that next session some such legislation would be introduced as he desired.

Hon. Mr. Turner, in continuing the debate pointed out the general terms in which the resolution was couched. Compulsory arbitration was not directly mentioned in it, although it was suggested throughout. Had it been more drastically worded it might to be wholly a caceptable to the house included, as it was, it appeared that several fullence in the members had not grasped its full interpret, and it was a question worthy of a road deal of consideration.
