ASHURST,

OR

THE DAYS THAT ARE NOT!

BY MRS. H. HILTON BROOM.

Would not a husband be, as she had said to her grandmother, a shield and a guard to her? But if so, why this husband? She thought of her gallant young cousin, of other men who had addressed her, but she felt that for none of these had she that admiration, that intelligent sympathy, which she had for Maxwell, and it was with these she turned as the best substitute for true affection.

Maxwell's conversation always interested her; his acquirements, his mind, were far beyond those of the other men whom she knew. With him there might be no love, but there would at least be an intellectual life, which Janet's developing mind was beginning to value and appreciate.

But then, did she esteem and like as well as admire him? And here Janet hesitated. She could hardly tell why, but she did not like him. He inspired her with a mistrust of his heart, which a woman seldom feels when that heart is devoted to her. Something about him, she knew not what rang hollow to her touch. In his most brilliant conversation there was a strain of mockery—in his highest thoughts, a touch of falseness. She recalled these perceptions—they were nothing more,—with alarm. She thought how inscrutable were his jet black eyes, in which no expression save that of power ever shone. She remembered the opinion which Hugh had expressed of him at the Sweet Springs, and involuntarily she beseeching glance with which he had parted from her. The true blue eyes, that seemed to ask for love, came before her. But with the recollection came anger, as she thought that even then he had been Agnes' lover and false to her than the man whom he had accused. Indignation and mortified pride came to her aid, and the battle began again.

A few days of this mental struggle so told upon Janet that when Maxwell arrived, first of the expected guests who were to spend the Christmas at Ashurst, Mrs Selwyn unasked, interceded with her husband for a delay in Janet's decision, and told Maxwell himself that "the child must have time to get accustomed to him.'

Maxwell had nothing to do but to acquiesce, which he did with his usual good grace, but he gnawed his black moustache and cursed in his heart at Mr. Selwyn's old fashioned notions, which had made him insist on gathering all his kinsfolk together, for this, which he fully expected to be his last Christmas upon earth.

The Vincents had invited Hugh Carlton and he was to arrive at their house from the West, at the same time as Mrs. Berkley and Agnes were to come from town. Maxwell felt very uneasy, and determined to lose no time in informing Mrs. Berkley of the danger, and to exercise the utmost vigilance himself, in preventing any meeting between Janet and Hugh.

In the meantime he exerted himself to make the best use of his time Never had he been so clever, so amiable, so interesting. The neighbors invited to meet him were delighted, Mrs. Selwyn shaken and her husband triumphant; only Janet grew paler and paler and shrank into herself. At last, only two days before Mrs. Berkley and Agnes were expected, the Ralph Selwyn girls insisted on carrying Janet over to spend those days with them, 'because when would they ever get her again?' and she, glad of a little quiet and absence, felt almost light-hearted as they cantered off among the wintry trees.

Two tranquil days passed. Poor Allan had taken himself and his despair to town so there was no love-making to be feared and Janet pleased by the kindly home love around her, and Herr Muller's enthusiastic delight, felt soothed and tranquil, luxuriated in the old man's music and put troublous thoughts away from her until the third day, on the evening of which she was to return home. Then Mr Selwyn and his sons rode off to a grand hunt given in honor of Mr. Maxwell, the girls drove to pay some visits, and Janet who had begged to be left quietly with her aunt, was sitting alone in the drawing room in a solitude very unusual in that populous house, waiting until Mrs Selwyn should return from her plantation visits, when the door opened and Hugh Carlton stood before her.

CHAPTER XVII.

"A quarter occhi."

Janet sprang up as Hugh Carlton entered, white to the lips, but the instinct to repress all sign of emotion comes as rapidly to some women as the emotion itself, and she walked down the long room to meet him, with no more visible excitement than the presence of any unexpected visitor might have caused, saying, easily:

'How do you do, Mr. Carlton? We did not expect you for some days. Have the others come?' And she forced the hand which she held out to him to be steady and firm. But it was no steady hand that clasped hers, and Hugh's voice was hoarse and his face flushed as he answered:

'No, I came first, last night; and hearing that you were here, came to see you.'

You are very kind,' she answered coldly. 'My aunt will be glad to see you;' and she took hold of the bell rope, but Hugh, hastily interposing, said:

'No, don't ring. I don't want to see her. It is to you yourself that I must speak!'

'To me!' with deepening color. 'I hope there is no bad news—is—Agnes well?'

Yes, I suppose so, but great heavens I must tell you, Janet,' grasping her arm roughly. 'Tell me the truth, are you going to marry Maxwell?'

'What right have you to ask?' she cried flushing crimson and shaking off his hand. 'What possible concern is it of yours?'

'What right? What concern? All, everything. Answer me, for God's sake.'

But Janet was far too angry to listen to any such appeal. He trifled with me once, she thought, does he mean to do it again? and drawing back a step she answered haughtily:

'You are not my brother-in law yet, Mr. Carlton. I cannot imagine what your right can be, but I will answer you. I do mean to marry Mr. Maxwell,' a resolution formed then and there.

'Oh, Janet, do not say so, do not I entreat you; you do not know all, and I, what shall I do?'

'What shall you do? Why nothing. My marriage can be of no great consequence to you.'

'Nothing in all the world is of so much,' he answered, sadly. I see that you are angry with me, but I cannot help it. Janet, look at me; trust me; I know that you could not love me When I found that it was so I went away, left you as you desired; but yet I have sometimes doubted. Now, at this moment, with your whole fate depending on it, I must know the whole truth. You say that you are going to marry Maxwell; but do you love him? Answer me by all that you hold sacred.

Janet was so excited that she hardly understood all that Hugh's speech implied but the solemnity of his manner and of his last words awed her. He stood before her with his hands clasped tight over each other, and his eyes fixed on her, with a look of such anguish as she had never before seen. Hesitatingly she answered:

'I do not understand you, but I will tell you the truth. I have not yet promised to marry Mr. Maxwell, but I mean to—to-morrow. No, I do not love him, but I respect and admire him, and I wish to marry him.'

'And is that all—really all?' cried Hugh, his face brightening.

'All! is it not enough?'

'Thank God, there is yet time. I can save her; it will not break her heart,' he exclaimed, and sinking into a chair, he covered his face with his hands, in an earnest thanksgiving.

'Break my heart,' she repeated wonderingly, and then stood by him in silence, thinking. 'It is broken already if that be all.'

With a great effort for composure Hugh rose, and, offering her a chair, said:

'If what I have to tell you shocks you, forgive it, because it must be a greater shame and grief for me to tell than for you to hear, and if such a story is not fit for your ears, you may be sure that, as Maxwell's wife, such, and worse, would come home to you every day. Do you remember that long ago when we first met, and I showed you the snake that had frightened you so dead, I told you that man was the proper type to express deceit and crime? You were pained, and told me, in your sweet girl voice, that we should love all God's creatures. Yes, you see how well I remember every word that you ever said to me,'

He paused with emotion. She made a little sign with her hand, and he continued;

'Well, the man—worse than any serpent of whom I thought then—was Maxwell.'

'Mr. Maxwell!'

'Yes; but I did not know it. You may remember that the next day, when the news came of your father's death, I told you that I, too, had not long since lost my father?'

'I remember, she said gently, 'You were very good to me.'

'Good! My poor child, I had better have left you in the pool than have saved you for—have—man! I did not tell you that I had also lost a sister.'

'No, but Mr. Vincent told grandpapa so.'

'It is of her that I must speak. She was my half sister, six years younger than I, and the loveliest creature you ever saw but so simple, so childish that we hardly knew if her mind were not wanting. Weak and undeveloped it certainly was. She was only twelve when her mother, a New Orleans woman, who had been the kindest of mothers to me, died, and she herself was ill of a long fever. My father never went back to the city after that, but lived entirely on a plantation that he had in a very lonely, wild part of the country.

There was no neighbors of our own class at all, and Lina had no companion but an old aunt of her mother's who lived with us, who was very deaf and infirm. She was sixteen and as beautiful as an angel, but had no more knowledge of the world than a child of ten.' And Hugh stopped and wiped his brow.

'Go on,' said Janet softly, she began to divine.

'She was not to blame,' he cried fiercely.

'She was innocent as an angel, as Eve when she knew not good from evil, but she was left to herself. I was away at college, her aunt aged, my father a sad, broken hearted man. A party of men came to a village near, surveying for a railroad. A stranger was hardly ever seen in that country; ours was the only good house. My father invited them, they came, one of them saw the child, her beauty, her simplicity waylaid her in her solitary walks in the woods, and persuaded her to fly with him.'

'My father pursued and found them, and when she told him, with fond simplicity, that M. Alford was her husband, that she had been married three days before, the villain told him, with a laugh, that a man did not marry an idiot! She had been fooled by a mock ceremony; he was tired of her already, her father could take her if he pleased, he wanted her no more.

'Oh!' cried Janet, starting up with her cheeks aflame; 'did he not kill him? Strike him dead, instantly?'

'Listen—the old man sprang upon him, they grappled and fell, but his grasp relaxed and his arm sank powerless. Paralysis had come on in the moment of revenge, and when I, summoned by my aunt, hurried home, the villain had vanished from the country, my father lay dying in one room, and she—the unfortunate in another.'

'Oh, Hugh, Hugh, I am sorry for you,' cried Janet, with the tears running down her cheeks, and forgetting, in the impulse of consolation, that she had never called him so before. She laid her slight fingers on his clenched fist, repeating softly: 'Hugh, I am so sorry for you'.

'God bless you my darling,' he said tenderly, but you do not know all. My father lived but a few hours after I had reached him. His speech and his mind both were so affected that it was with the utmost difficulty that I could gather what I have told you. And my poor Lina—poor innocent victim, most happily lived but a few days more. At first she did not comprehend what evil had been done, but in her dying moments, as they say it often happens to the feeble mind, hers seemed to brighten, her understanding became clearer, and she died charging me never to attempt to revenge or punish the wrong which had been done her. She forgave her own injuries, but lamented the shame to us, and conjured me to keep forever secret the disgrace which she had brought upon her name. Say, Janet, say that she was innocent.'

'Most innocent, most unhappy, most foully wronged. Oh, I hope, I hope that you were gentle with her!'

'I hope so,' doubtfully. 'I tried to be, but, oh shame! and shame by a woman, is hard to bear. But I promised all she asked, and she died happy. I tried what I could to find out the man, but in vain. My aunt knew nothing but the facts of the flight, the pursuit and the miserable return. She supposed that it had been one of the gentlemen who had dined at the house a few weeks before. She told me what names she could remember, but her deafness made her very uncertain. I inquired in the village, and found that one of the party, who, the innkeeper said did not seem to be an engineer, had stayed for some time after the others had left. He believed that his name was Alford, but could not be quite sure. I wrote to the president of the company, to ask if there were a person of that name in its service. He said 'No,' and so the quest—and for what purpose was I making it?—failed. One man only had seen the villain, the boy who drove my father in his pursuit; he was the son of my sister's mauimer, and between him and the old woman they kept it quiet. I swore them to secrecy, and went back to finish my course at college, meaning afterwards to go to Europe. On my way there, Janet I met you, and took with me the memory of the dear little face that might, had you so willed it, have made earth all heaven to me; but—don't cry so dear—what do you say?' For Janet, through her streaming tears, cried:

'Oh Hugh, if you loved me, why did you leave me and give yourself to Agnes?'

'Janet, were you not secretly engaged to Maxwell? Did you not send me word that you loved him, and beg me to go?'

'I! oh, never.'

'Janet, my dearest, my treasure, can it be, is it possible that you love me?' and he clasped her in his arms.

For one moment she lay upon his breast, with his cheek pressed to her's—then pushing him from her she cried:

'Ah Heaven—Agnes—you are her's.'

'No—before God I am not,' he cried vehemently. 'Listen, Janet; some most foul treachery has been here, and I will not have our two lives spoiled.'

'Tell me,' she said trembling, 'who told you that I was engaged to Mr. Maxwell?'

'Your mother; you remember that evening when I begged you to say that to you it had been a happy day, how you left me without a word?'

'Because he—Mr. Maxwell—came between us, and when I offered you the flower you did not take it, but held Agnes' hand and looked at her.'

'Because she looked at me'—with a shudder.

'That night Mrs. Berkley came to my room, and told me that you had proposed to Agnes at the White—that you were desperately in love, and were waiting until she could decide for your answer.'

'And you believed her?'

'Had you ever said one word to me? Besides, I had seen that look.

'Janet, she is a devil This is all her work.'

'Was it not true? Oh, Hugh!'

VEGETINE.

—WILL CURE—

SCROFULA,

Scrofulous Humor.

VEGETINE will eradicate from the system every taint of Scrofula and Scrofulous Humor. It has permanently cured thousands in Boston and vicinity who had been long and painful sufferers.

Cancer, Cancerous Humor.

The marvellous effects of VEGETINE in case of Cancer and Cancerous Humor challenges the most profound attention of the medical faculty, many of whom are prescribing VEGETINE to their patients.

Canker.

VEGETINE has never failed to cure the most inflexible case of Canker,

Mercurial Diseases.

The VEGETINE meets with wonderful success in the cure of this class of diseases.

Salt Rheum.

Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, etc., will certainly yield to the great alterative effects of VEGETINE.

Erysipelas.

Vegetine has never failed to cure the most inveterate case of Erysipelas.

Pimples and Humors on the Face.

Reason should teach us that a blotchy, rough or pimpled skin depends entirely upon an internal cause, and no outward application can ever cure the defect. Vegetine is the great blood purifier.

Tumors, Ulcers or Old Sores

Are caused by an impure state of the blood. Cleanse the blood thoroughly with Vegetine, and these complaints will disappear.

Catarrh.

For this complaint the only substantial benefit can be obtained through the blood. Vegetine is the great blood purifier,

Constipation.

Vegetine does not act as a cathartic to debilitate the bowels, but cleanses all the organs, enabling each to perform the functions devolving upon them.

Piles.

Vegetine has restored thousands to health who have been long and painful sufferers.

Dispepsia.

If Vegetine is taken regularly, according to directions, a certain and speedy cure will follow its use.

Faintness at the Stomach.

Vegetine is not a stimulating bitters which creates a fictitious appetite, but a gentle tonic, which assists nature to restore the stomach to a healthy action.

Female Weakness.

Vegetine acts directly upon the causes of these complaints. It invigorates and strengthens the whole system acts upon the secretive organs and allays inflamation.

General Debility.

In this complaint the good effects of the Vegetine are realized immediately after commencing to take it; as debility denotes deficiency of the blood, and Vegetine acts directly upon the blood.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED

IS A FACT ATTESTED BY THE HIGHEST MEDICAL AUTHORITIES IN THE WORLD.

A careful observance of the laws of health, and the systematic and persistent use of Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda will accomplish this result. This preparation has all the virtues of these two most valuable specifics, in a form perfectly palatable, and acceptable to the most delicate stomach, and we make the unqualified statement that Scott's Emulsion is being used with better results, and endorsed and prescribed by more physicians for Consumption—and the diseases leading to it such as Chronic Coughs, Bronchitis, Scrofula, Anæmia, General Debility and the Wasting Disorders of children, than any other remedy known to medical science. The rapidity with which patients improve on this food medicine diet, is truly marvellous.

See what Physicians and the People say about it.

MESSRS. SCOTT & BOWNE: 66 West Thirty-sixth Street, New York, Sept. 2, 1876.

GENTS—I have frequently prescribed "Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites during the past year, and regard it as a valuable preparation in scrofulous and consumptive cases, palatable and efficacious. C. C LOCKWOOD, M. D.

MESSRS. SCOTT & BOWNE—Gentlemen—Within the last year I have used in my own family, and in my private practice prescribed very extensively Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites and found it a most valuable preparation, especially in diseases of children. It is agreeable to the most delicate stomach; which renders it a very reliable agent as a nutritive remedy in consumptive and scrofulous cases.

Oct. 17, 1878. Yours respectfully, A. H. SAXTON, M. D., Baltimore.
