

AN IRISH SKETCH. A DAY IN AN OLD MANOR HOUSE.

Miss, put on your smartest gown. 'Tis the flower of the quality, you'll be dinin' wid to-day at Killalla.

I considered the equipage which bore us to Killalla House unworthy of persons of such distinction as we appeared to be, but no other public conveyance is in vogue in the country except "outside" jaunting cars.

In the hall, on the south-east of Ireland, Sir Walter Raleigh's Elizabethan house still stands, with its garden, where he planted the potatoes.

Little people here find too much restraint and formality in the dining-room and drawing-rooms of their elders.

After a weary shaking over the hills of the dirty, struggling town, and a restful spin through the avenue of Killalla, the jingling jacked into the arms of a sedan.
