

lection on the character of the male medical students. The physician however must have been right as to the fact. He was right too if he thought, that though there may be a total absence of complicity or even of conscious sympathy, there is a tacit connection among the different parts of the "Revolt of Woman." What people who feel inclined to join any part of the movement practically have to determine is, whether they desire a revolution not only in the political relations of the two sexes, but in their domestic relations and in the character and duties of women. A more momentous question humanity could not have to consider. That part of the movement which is in fact a revolt against maternity, and to which Dr. Richardson's protest applied, tends, though in a melancholy way, to repress itself. In the United States the native race, which is the seat of it, manifestly dwindles, while the foreign races to which it has not yet spread gain ground. The Bostonian author of "Looking Backward" tells women that they do all that can be expected of them if they "cultivate their own charms and graces." He apparently does not think it a part of their natural duty to preserve and perpetuate the race.

—Some recent editorials in the Winnipeg Tribune have the right ring, and if Manitoba can only be got to act in their spirit she may, with a good harvest, do well. She has allowed herself to be sacrificed to the game of old Eastern parties which were organized before she was born and in whose intrigues and rivalries she has no interest whatever. Her settlers have been plundered through the tariff for the purpose of buying support for the Ottawa Government by means of subsidies, grants to political railways, and bribery of all kinds in Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, with which she practically has no more connection than she has with the British Colonies in any other part of the globe. Her connection with Ottawa has so far been nothing but a bane to her and to everything in her except the retainers of the Government or the C. P. R.
