Officer Corbet said his first name was George. This was taken down as evidence. On Friday evening last the Salvation Army marched to the corner of Mill, Main and Paradise Row, and formed in a circle. Fully four dozen people were there, the street is narrow, and traffic was blocked. Corbet spoke to members of the army, who pointed to Adjt. Wiggins, and said they could not move until he ordered them to do so. Then Corbet requested Adjt. Wiggins and said they could not move until he ordered them to do so. Then Corbet requested Adjt. "What liberty?" asked Corbet. "British liberty," asked to crope the corner for three or four minutes.

So Corbet reported. After the brief conversation the Army remained on the corner for three or four minutes.

Mr. McAlpine went into details, and by a very gradual process got Corbet to admit that the army might have remained only three minutes, or two minutes, or perhaps one and a half. In the same way the four dezen people who were there shrunk to about a dozen and a half.

Their Progress.

Sergt. Webb is highly pleased with the progress being made by the class in signalling and says that deep interest is being taken in the work. Between forty and forty-five militiamen are under instruction and are getting along so well that tomorrow evening he expects to start them in the sending of messages. The lessons up to the present have been in mastering the alphabet in the different systems and in acquiring a thorough knowledge of the theory of signalling.

POLICE COURT.

On Saturday night, Dan O'Leary had a burden which it was a shame for a white man to bear. Down on North street he made an unkind remark to a girl who was passing with her brother and the brother sailed in to pulverize Daniel. The two were rolling in the snow when Officer Rankine happened along and O'Leary who had been escorted home scaller in the source of through this port. It was a matter that should engage government encouragement. The fruit trade between America and the West Indies was considerable, but Canada, though a big consumer of fruit, reaped very little from it. Continuing, Mr. Estabrooks said that the West Indien trade might be partially captured if the government would only give it the attention it deserved. Montreal and Ottawa would be the distributing points. As a matter of fact purchasers from all over America already go to Montreal and Ottawa for their fruit. The consumption at this port would only be what would be necessary.
