Campus dialogue

By BRIAN MILNER
and TIM CLARK

What do you think of the idea of a staff association?

TINA MILETIC, economics department. I think it's a great idea.

D.J. MITCHELL, director of personnel. If they know what they want then it's a useful thing. If they are representative I can't see that there is any harm in both sides talking.

JO-ANNE MCGINN, secretarial services. I think an association is fine but with no union ties. Unions attract parasites, people who aren't working what they're worth. Unions mean advancement without necessary merit. I want an association that betters the services of the secretary. I don't feel that I'm underpaid.

W.W. SMALL, vice-president, administration. If it's meeting a need, why not. What would an association do for such a variety of people? In theory, it would be useful. From time to time there is a need for representation on some committee. An association might provide the mechanical means of choosing the representatives.

MARSHA LITTLE, undergraduate secretary, political science. I think there should be one because the salaries around here aren't rated right. Every department's different. You aren't paid on experience around here either.
