

INTRODUCTION

OF all our cousins, Our Little Canadian Cousin is our nearest neighbor and consequently our best known friend. The fact that we speak the same language, share the same continent, and that we Americans once owed allegiance to England, just as Canada does now, has ever been a bond between us; but now the World War has made even a closer tie. From the very first months of the war Americans and Canadians fought side by side, for many of our boys, too eager to wait for America, went to Canada, as soon as England declared war, and enlisted with our Canadian cousins.

When Canada received England's call for help, she did not hesitate; but poured out men and supplies unstintingly. Before it seemed possible Canadian troops were in France; in fact, within eight weeks the first contingent was sent to England. Once in France, the
