"Men who wish to become enlightened or educated on any particular subject may obtain from books all the knowledge required, provided they find what books to read."—R. T. Crane.

It has been our endeavor to meet Mr. Crane's proviso by bringing before you the books in this little catalogue. They are all good books, eminently readable, presenting their subjects interestingly and with telling force—a style calculated best to impress the subject upon the mind.

The several authors are men and women unusually well equipped, bringing to their tasks years of experience gained in the laboratory and the classroom—practical teachers who, from actual contact with hundreds of students, have learned their wants and know how to supply them.

Each subject is taken up most thoroughly, although each book has been kept well within bounds by the elimination of the unnecessary. Every word is needed—there is no padding.

You will find these books of unusual value, because they are down-to-the-minute, concise yet complete, crisp and definite in style.
