trouble him much. But then his constitution is a strong one in spite of his age. He sleeps on the rug in front of the fire in the privy council room and blinks and nods his head while British ministers discuss far-reaching questions.

All cats in the service of the British Government are on the payroll, each receiving as a general rule twenty-five cents per week. Should any of them fall ill, the head of the department to which the animal belongs is at liberty to call in a veterinary and charge the government with his services. In the Home Office is a cat rejoicing in the name of Toby, who is constantly in the doctor's hands. He suffers from asthma and positively dreads the advent of London's cold and fogs. He is eleven years of age and is a great favorite with every one.

The official cat at the Board of Trade is Mac, four years of age. The only claim he appears to have to fame is in the hunting field where he can dispatch more mice in half an hour than any other cat would in a week. Joe is at the head of the Board of Education. Two summers only have passed over his head, yet he is an old hand at catching mice and rats.

At the Paymaster-General's office the official cats are Duke and Duchess, and though they have not distinguished themselves so far, they show great promise for their age—only five months. They were christened Duke and Duchess because they came from the Duke of Wellington's house at Stratfield.

In one of the new post-office buildings at St. Martins-le-Grand are six magnificent cats representing the official feline staff of the department. It can not be said that their duties are very arduous, for the concrete floors and stone walls do not offer very attractive quarters to rats and mice. In the older buildings of the post-office, however, cats are absolutely essential to keep the rats away from the mail-bags.

At the Tower the Ordnance Department employs cats to protect the military stores, and every week the order for their allowance is duly signed and recorded by the captain in charge. Numerous cats are also kept in various departments of the Arsenal at Woolwich and at all places where stores of any kind are housed. The animals often become pets with the men and every store has its favourite cat. There is a cat in the barracks at Knightbridge, London, which has been taught to turn somersaults and walk across a rope slung between two chairs. For giving such performances for the amusement of the British Tommies and for chasing away the mice, he is officially granted the usual allowance of twenty-five cents weekly.—"The World To-Day."

OBEYING ORDERS.

The master mechanic had finished showing me through the great car works, where hundreds of men were at work. It was a great railroad plant at the end of a division of one of our greatest railroads. It had been an inspiring hour for me. The order, the power that I had seen displayed, the splendid system with which everything was managed, the well-kept walks, the rush and push and hustle of it all, filled me with admiration for the general who was the one man under whose charge all these great activities were being carried on so admirably. He had an oversight of all. Every man in the employ of that division was under him. Every train that went out or came in, every pound of coal that was used, every gill of oil, every can of paint, every bolt, every particle of repair to car or road-bed, were all under this man's supervision, in one way or another, though, of course, he had his lieutenants to look after the details.

After we had gone through the great shops and were chatting in the plain but well-appointed office, I said to him, "How did you get this position?" I was interested to know for he had told me that he had begun work in this great shop as a labourer at a dollar and a half a day.

He had remarked this incidentally and as I saw the vast amount of ability which must have been developed in order that he might do what was now being done, I was interested to know by what process he had climbed up the ladder of responsibility and success. So I was asked how it came about that he had managed to climb so high. Turning to me, he simply replied—and I shall never forget that answer:

"I have reached my present position by doing what I was told."

That was all he said, but this simple reply spoken most naturally and quietly, tells volumes, and is one of the choicest secrets of success known to the business world. Almost all of those who employ labour tell me that the one thing that they find most difficult to secure is a man who will do exactly what he is told, and do it thoroughly and patiently. No man who is a man wants an employee who is a mere machine, but there is no activity in the world which does not need those who are willing to obey orders. The boy who enters the employ of any business house, determined to do the very best that can be done, the things that he is told, and who is always found in his place doing this, will be certain before long to be requested to do something higher and more important.

THE VALLEY OF PIGEONS.

One of the commonest sights in the land of Palestine, we are told, is the pigeon. Every house in Palestine, except perhaps the very poorest, has its pigeons. The better class of people keep their pigeons in a dove-cote made of mud of brick, roofed over to keep out the rain. In such a dove-cote are put wide-mouthed earthen pots, which serve as nesting-places. The poorer class of people have smaller dove-cotes, while a very poor man will keep the pigeons right in his own home, letting the birds fly in and out through the door of the house.

Pigeons also make their homes in large numbers in the rocks and clefts of the hill sides in Palestine. One of the most remarkable places near the Sea of Galilee is called the Valley of Pigeons, because such large numbers of these birds are there found.

The Bible often refers to pigeons, and speaks very often of doves, which belong to the pigeon family. The turtle dove is mentioned more than fifty times in Scripture. The coming of the turtle dove was one of the signs of the springtime, and we may well imagine the joy of the people when this bird made its annual appearance.

Be Warned by Headache

It Tells of Serious Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys.

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

You can stop a headache with powerful drugs. But it is not generally wise to do so.

A headache almost always warns you of derangements of the digestive system, the liver, kidneys or bowels.

Awaken the liver to healthful action by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills and you not only free yourself of headache, but remove the cause which will soon lead to more dangerous results than headache.

Invigorate the action of the kidneys by this treatment and you take away the dangers of Bright's disease as well as free yourself of headache.

Pains are the result of poison in the system and whether you have headache, backache or aching limbs, you can be almost sure of relief and cure when you cleanse and regulate the vital organs by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

They are wonderfully prompt, as well as definite and thorough in action. You can depend upon them, no matter how long-standing or complicated your case, so long as the cause is the sluggish, torpid condition of the liver and kidneys.
