STRAIGHT TALKS--No. 4

What constitutes money? What is a dollar? A dollar is simply a promise made by the whole commercial world to pay to you a dollar's worth of anything you may desire. A dollar in your pocket—provided you earned it honestly—is a certificate showing that you have put a dollar's worth of service into exchange and have not yet taken that amount out.

It is not absolutely necessary to have actual money,—for instance—there is no difference in principle between your wife selling her butter and eggs to a storekeeper for money, and then with the money buying a new woollen shirt for you, than by taking her produce direct to the storekeeper and trading it for anything you or she may desire.
