AMERICA
 The United States government has announced that it will not recognize the new government in Mexico until it has been elected by the people. This decision is a significant one, as it shows the United States' commitment to democratic principles and its opposition to any form of foreign intervention in Mexico's internal affairs.

THE HOUSE
 The House of Representatives has passed a bill providing for the relief of the distressed districts in the West. The bill is designed to provide financial assistance to those who have been affected by the recent drought and crop failures. This is a timely and necessary measure, and it is hoped that it will be passed into law as soon as possible.

THE SENATE
 The Senate has also passed a bill providing for the relief of the distressed districts in the West. This bill is similar to the one passed by the House, and it is expected that it will be signed into law by the President. The passage of this bill is a testament to the Senate's concern for the welfare of the American people.

THE PRESIDENT
 President Wilson has issued a proclamation regarding the recent events in Mexico. He has stated that the United States will not recognize any government in Mexico that is not elected by the people. This proclamation is a clear statement of the United States' policy towards Mexico, and it is hoped that it will be respected by all parties involved.

THE COUNCIL
 The Council of the League of Nations has met in Geneva, Switzerland. The council is composed of representatives from the major powers, and it is responsible for maintaining international peace and security. The council's meeting is an important one, as it will discuss the recent events in Mexico and the role of the United States in the situation.

THE WORLD
 The world is in a state of great uncertainty and tension. The recent events in Mexico have caused a great deal of concern and speculation among the nations of the world. It is hoped that the United States and the other major powers will work together to resolve the situation in Mexico and to maintain international peace and stability.

LOCAL NEWS
 In Toronto, the city council has passed a resolution regarding the recent events in Mexico. The council has expressed its support for the United States' policy towards Mexico, and it has also expressed its concern for the welfare of the city's residents. The council's resolution is a clear statement of the city's position on the situation in Mexico.
