A Complicated "Run-In"

(From Tit-Bits.)
"You'll get run-in," said the pedestrian to the cyclist, "if you ride without a light."
"You'll get run into," responded the rider as he knocked the other down.

"You'll get run in, too!" said the policeman, as he stepped forward and seized the cyclist.
Just then another scorching came along without a light, so the policeman was run into, too, and had to run in two.

The Prisoners at the Bar.

(From the Boston Transcript.)
Bethmann-Hollweg is not to be humored by the Entente in his desire to suffer vicariously for his lord and master, the Kaiser. His noble proposition is not welcomed. It is possible, however, that he may be accommodated with the punishment entirely on his own account. The Kaiser has his own great sin to settle for. In history he will pay for it with every shred of good reputation that he ever possessed. He will rank with Caligula and Nero; his infamy will be appraised far beyond that of either Napoleon, for the first Napoleon, though a monster of aggression, promoted the greatness of France and left behind him a beneficent code of laws, while Napoleon III., though he wrecked and impoverished his own country, did very little harm to any other. The inherent and original malevolence of William II. was doubtless no greater than that of other Hohenzollerns up to the time of his short-lived father, but the earlier Hohenzollerns were crowned with success, while the structure of William II.'s aggression has gone down in disaster. The disaster—such in history's force of satire—intensifies the infamy of the ex-Kaiser's record. "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord; I will repay." Perhaps, after all, it might be well to leave William of Germany to the infamy that awaits his name—an infamy to whose sum the rod of official justice can add little, and for which the punishment of no one else can atone. Yet justice must be done, for the vindication of the law, and the world will expect that William II. will yet stand before the bar of an international court. But there are others in Germany who should stand there too. We now know, from Minister Brand Whitlock's revelations, that the defunct Von Bissing was not the only one who was responsible for the death of Edith Cavell. The murderers of Capt. Fryatt are surely to be made amenable. The butchers of Louvain and Aerschot and Dinant must not escape; the list of those who decreed butchery and rapine in France and Belgium is long; and at Berlin there were men higher up who signed the orders under which these crimes were committed. Who was responsible for the sinking of the Lusitania and the Sussex? It may well be that Bethmann-Hollweg, though he proved an inadequate instrument for the Kaiser's ultimate purposes, will find his name in the list on its own demerits.

Bill, the Aesthete.

(From the London Daily News.)
During the warmest hour of yesterday a traction engine drawing two "trailers" piled high with barrels of stout and beer panted painfully along Fleet Street. One of the laborers engaged on mysterious excavations of the pavement pointed with his shovel to the procession and exclaimed: "Oh, my Lord, Bill, ain't that a beautiful sight?" His mate gazed admiringly at the glorious spectacle and replied, with a sympathetic sigh "Not half!" And yet some short-sighted cynic has said that the British workingman is "devoid of vision," and "does not, like the ancient Greeks, possess an innate aesthetic appreciation of the Beautiful."
