A Famous

French Soldier

The funeral of Marshal MacMahon Duc de Magenta, a brave French soldier descended from an Irish family who followed the fortunes of the Stuarts to France, took place in Paris on Oct. 22, 1893, and was a grand and solemn pageant, with a procession from the Madeline, by the Rue Royale, the Place de la Concorde, and the Champs Elysees, and down the Ave. Invalides. The funeral car, drawn by six black horses, was accompanied by State officials, the Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honour, the Minister of Marine, and the Vice-Presilor of Deputies, followed by the other ministers, the foreign Ambassadors, dents of the Senate and the Chancel the Russian Admiral Avellan, and many officers of the army. Among the wreaths was one sent by Queen Victoria, with her own handwriting, to express her "regard and profound sympathy," another was from the Prince of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII.).
