MUST QUIT FILBUSTERING

Uncle Sam To Be So Notified by the Spanish Minister at Washington.

London, Oct. 22.—The Madrid cor-respondent of the Daily Mail says: Senor De Lome, the Spanish minister at Washington, has been instructed to notify the American government that henceforth filibustering expeditions will be regarded as breaches of international law. Such, at any rate, is the substance of his instructions, though it is just possible that the form in which they will be carried into effect may modify their import.

Shortage of the Food Supply at Daw son City Confirmed -Little Chance to Get Away.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 22.—Capt. Hooper, commander of the Bering Sea patrol fleet, who has arrived in Washington to attend the seal conference, said today that the reports con-cerning the scarcity of food in the Klondike region are not, in his judgment, exaggerated.

In the neighborhood of Dawson City there are, he said, about 5,000 miners, whose supply of provisions for the coming winter is no greater than barely sufficient for half the number during last winter. Great suffering would be the inevitable result of this scarcity Although some of the more vigorous among the miners might attempt to get away on the ice of the Yukon, the Without going back to the time when the so-called Cinque ports, namely Hastings, Dover, Sandwich, Romney of a mile straight down.

"Help, boys, quick!" he called, excitedly tugging at the rope. and Hythe, monopolized England's commerce, we may recall the fact that in 1205 London's trade only slightly exceeded that of Boston, or of Southtransacted by the Hanseatic League, was surpassed in the number of ships and men contributed to the royal fleet by Yarmouth, Fowey and Dartmouth, and was almost equaled by Bristol, Plymouth, Winchelsea and Southampton. About three and a half centuries afterward, that is to say, in 1702, we find London controlled a considerably larger share of the nation's tonnage than she does today, the figures for London being 84,882, and for all English ports 261,226 tons. At this date Bristol held the second place; next came Newcastle, then Yarmouth, and then Liverpool. A century later, namely, on Sept. 3, 1800, the tonnage of London was 568,262, and that of all the ports of the United Kingdom 1,682,405 tons. Liverpool and Newcastle occupied the second and third place, each showing about 140,000 tons, but Yarmouth and Bristol had fallen to the ninth and tenth places respectively. Southampton stood nineteenth on the list, and Glasgow barely obtained mention with 10,052 tons. Cardiff, destined to make so great a figure in our day, could muster at the begining of the century only 1,096 tons. Now let us observe the changes which the last quarter of a century has witnessed. To this end let us compare the statistics for 1872 with those for 1893. At both dates London and Liverpool ranked first and second in respect of tonnage entered, the two ports being credited in 1893 with 7,782,402 and 5,251, 570 respectively. Cardiff, which occupied the fifth place in 1872, had risen to the third place 21 years later; Hull remained stationary in the fourth place, and Southampton in the sixth place. Newcastle sank from the third to the fifth place. Glasgow, which in 1872 was the tenth port in point of magnitude, had become the seventh in 1893, and during the same period Canada.

CARRIED OFF BY EAGLES

Two Birds, Captured by Farmers and Tied Together, Soar Away With the Man Who Held Them.

[Boston Journal.] One of the most remarkable escapes from death, and as exciting a tale of adventure as has been uttered for many years, is related by Peter Pipiere, a young farmer and hunter of the region just over the St. John River, in Canada, who has just come up the country after a peculiar tour. The journey covered 30 miles and was completed in an hour. Friday forenoon Pipiere left home at the head of a party of young farmers for a day's hunt. An eagles' nest on the top of Wallywas Mountain, eight miles away, was the objective point of the expedition. This expedition had in mind the capture of a pair of eagles that were known to be on the moun-tain and the disposal of them to a circus.

Every man wore heavy leather gloves and bore in his hand a bludgeon. Pipiere carried the rope. The capture of eagles on mountain tops is not a safe or an easy matter. The attacking party then advanced on the works of the enemy, who were sunning themselves in the front door of their rocky nest. It was a sharp herself, although she keeps her place of primacy, scarcely displays the commercial preponderance which is exhibited by New York on this side of the Atlantic.

At first the weight of the body beneath them was too much and the swung low over the treetops of the valley, after a fearful plunge from above, from where the faint cries of the men still echoed through the forest. after the first surprise, and terrified with their strange burden, the pair spread their big wmgs out still wider and flew straight out over the country, southward.

Pipiere didn't know what to do. He is athletic in the extreme, and he had strength enough to swing both legs over the rope and make a safe hold for himself thereon. The eagles seemed to be flying strongly. Straight over the town flew Pipiere and his flying span. Peter saw the people in the street looking up at him and running back and forth in a crazy endeavor to see the nature of the new demon of the sky above them. But the birds were flying at the rate of 40 miles an hour, and the town was soon left behind. Over Frenchville the birds passed at the speed of a fast express. By this time Pipiere's muscles were lame and sore from long tension, and he was weak and growing weaker. But the birds were losing power, too. Not even they could endure the dreadful strain, and just over the town hall, they came down lightly on the steps. The eagles were well-nigh exhausted. So was Pipiere, but he tied them up in a friend's barn and watered them. Three hours later, when his frighten ed companions arrived home, 30 miles or so away, Peter was there to meet them, having come up in a wagon, with the eagles tied in the rear. Pipiere has the eagles still alive.
