THE TRIAL FOR BLASPHEMY

THE DEFINITION OF BLASPHEMY

THE NEW ENGLISH CRIMINAL CODE—Why Three Journalists were Punished—Character of Their Offense.

Monroe E. Conway, writing from London, March 10, in the Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette, says:

This country has been a good deal stirred and interested by a trial for blasphemy, which has resulted in the severe punishment of three men. The case is not so interesting in itself as in the light it has shed upon every feature of the law as it exists, and the influence it is likely to wield upon the shaping of the new law which the government has brought in.

The offenders are Messrs. Foote, Ramsay and Kemp, the editor, proprietor, and salesman of the Free-Thinker, in which were published cartoons admittedly punishable at common law. One represented Jehovah lighting his pipe, with the words, "Let there be light," and the other, "Jehovah showing his back to Moses, his head and feet being veiled by clouds. For these and some other satirical drawings they were tried. Foote was sentenced to a year's imprisonment, Ramsay to nine months' and Kemp to three months. The judge and jury were loudly biased in the court room, but the offenders have met much sympathy.

Readings have been made in various parts of the country, and have done much to enlighten the public mind. The new M. P. whom somebody described as "the man who spelt God with his pen," and who is now in the dock, is a man of high character, and his case has attracted much public attention.

Another petition has been filed against the trial of Mr. Ramsay, the conservative member for West Middlesex. The petitioners are the owners of the Free-Thinker, and are asking for a meeting to discuss the question of a petition for the committal order.
