"The Store that Satisfies."

THE PRINCE OF WALES AS A SOLDIER

Many charming little stories, demonstrating his great human and soldierly qualities, are being told about the Prince of Wales, who will open the Canadian National Exhibition on Monday, August 25th.

The Canadian boys overseas had plenty of opportunity to observe his actions and declare that he seemed to love danger, and at times his conduct bordered on the reckless.

This side of his character is well illustrated by the following extract from Ian Hay's book, "The First Hundred Thousand."

"Blakie lit his pipe—it was almost broad daylight now—and considered.

"Yes," he agreed. "Perhaps. Still my son, I can't say I have ever noticed staff officers crowding into the trenches (as they have a perfect right to do) at four o'clock in the morning. And I can't say I altogether blame them. In fact, if ever I do meet one performing such a feat, I shall say: 'There goes a sahib—and a soldier,' and I shall take off my hat to him."

"Well, get ready now," said Bobby. "Look."

They were still standing at the trench junction. Two figures in the uniform of the staff were visible in Orchard Trench, working their way down from the apex, picking their steps amid the tumbled sandbags, and stooping low to avoid gaps in the ruined parapet. The sun was just rising behind the German trenches. One of the officers was burly and middle-aged; he did not appear to enjoy bending double. His companion was slight, fair-haired, and looked incredibly young. Once or twice he glanced over his shoulder and smiled encouragingly at his senior.

The pair emerged through the archway into the main trench, and straightened their backs with obvious relief. The younger officer—he was a lieutenant—noticed Captain Blakie, saluted him gravely, and turned to follow his companion.

Captain Blakie did not take his hat off, as he had promised. Instead he stood suddenly to attention, and saluted in return, keeping his hand uplifted until the slim, childish figure had disappeared round the corner of a traverse.

It was the Prince of Wales.

Brooko Township Woman Sues For Alimony

Application for interim alimony was made at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, in the action of Lucas vs. Lucas.

The plaintiff sued her husband, Clarence Lucas, for alimony and the custody of the baby child, who is a few months old. The court has by order allowed plaintiff $50 towards her disbursements in the action and $100 for arrears of interim alimony together with $10 per week until the trial.

The parties were married about two years ago in the Township of Brooko, and after some few months' residence there the defendant began to treat his wife with cruelty, so the plaintiff alleges, and she further asserts that his habits were far from being what they should.

The defendant's parents appear to have taken the child from his mother when he was only a few months old and the father upholds that course.

Recently the defendant conveyed his 40 acre farm to his father, and the plaintiff alleges this was a fraud, and done to evade her claim.

There is a fair prospect of another action to set aside this deed. F. W. Willson for plaintiff, and Meredith and Meredith, London, for defendant.

BASEBALL

WATFORD 9, FOREST 7.

Before the largest crowd of the season Watford kept up its winning streak by defeating the Forest boys in a fast and exciting game. The Forest umpire's decisions were not very favorable to many of the fans. The score was tied several times but in the last minutes of play the home brews managed to put two more counters across the plate making the final score 9-7. Rogers pitched in his usual fine style.

The return game was played at Forest on Wednesday evening. It was exceedingly uninteresting. Forest walking away with a score of 20 to 5. No report of the game is necessary.

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

We regret to report that Mr. McKenzie who has rendered high and efficient service to the Watford High School for the past three years has withdrawn his services to enter on another field of labor which because of the present stress of life offers greater remuneration. The student body, the Staff and Board of Education have enjoyed associations with Mr. McKenzie, and in his Church home, the Presbyterian Church, he will be much missed both in his kindly counsels and his work in various church departments. In matters of good citizenship too Watford has gratefully appreciated his services on many occasions. Mr. McKenzie is perfecting himself in mechanical drafting and will likely enter business with his father who is a master mechanic in Guelph. Our best wishes go to him in his high success throughout his future career. For this year Mr. McKenzie will carry on his work in the Cobourg Collegiate.

The outlook for 1919-1920 is bright. There will be a large First Form and a better balance in each of the other Forms. The laboratory is being put in thoroughly up-to-date condition as to plumbing utilities and the campus much improved. Each year must be better than the last.

Mr. McKenzie's position will be filled by a specialist in Mathematics and Physics with standard qualifications in Physical Culture and Cadet work. The Board of Education will endeavor in every particular to enhance the present high state of efficiency of the High School.

Incidental to Soldiers' Day, Aug. 20th, the High School will doubtless be offered to the various organizations of women of the town as a rest haven and reception building for visiting women. The Principal will be glad to co-operate with these organizations in making women visitors as comfortable as possible.

The Principal's Office, Watford High School, Aug. 5th.

SI KLONE ON FUNERAL EXTRAVAGANCE

According to present day standard, dying is a mighty expensive business. It is almost as expensive to go to Heaven as to take a trip to California. I would gladly start a crusade against the planting in cemeteries annually enough wealth to relieve most of the actual want in the world, but what good would it do? Human nature is fond of display, and in the midst of the grief of bereavement people can find it in their hearts to feel proud of the fine casket, the beautiful hearse and the number of carriages at the funeral. They even boast sadly of how good-looking the departed one was in the coffin. It is not all pride, however, and a liking for display which prompts people to lavish expense upon the obsequies of the dear departed. The surviving relatives are quite frequently actuated by a feeling of conscience-stricken remorse.

The dear old, neglected mother passes uncomplainingly away. The tired hands are folded in eternal idleness across her breast, idle for the first time in scores of years, and the sons and daughters come home to lay her away to rest. As they stand by the open casket, gazing down upon that face from which the time-grooved wrinkles have been smoothed by the hand of death, their consciences reproach them for the letters they neglected to write the old mother at home, for the money or gifts they might have sent her and did not, for the visit they put off until it was too late to awaken joy in those loving old eyes, which would rather have beheld them than the richest spectacle on earth. They think of the things they thoughtlessly left undone that would have brought joy to the weary, lonely little mother, and in a last frantic effort to atone and ease their own troubled souls, they spend money lavishly to "give mother a splendid funeral." Those who know the mother heart know she would gladly be laid away in a rough pine box drawn to an obscure grave on an ox cart, if she might only enjoy while alive the letters and visits and yearned for love of the children to whom she gave life and for whom she toiled and saved and planned. There is no casket ever designed too good for the humblest good mother that ever lived, but above all things they prize most the thoughtfulness and love of their boys and girls.

To the boys away from home, let me urge you, don't neglect to write to and visit your mother until you stand at her bier. No magnificence you can command then will ever atone for a mother's heartache caused by your neglect.
