HOUSE AND HOUSEHOLD.

THE WINDING STREAMLET.

BY JOSEPH T. COPITHORNE. Hedged in by sombre hills and bleak In murmurs soft, creeps Islais Creek. Along the bases of the hills, Fed by a thousand sparkling rills. That down the rugged mountain side, From secret springs—a ceaseless tide— They fall into the Creek's embrace— The garrulous bubblers of the place!

O'er rocky fedges smooth as 2'ass, In flakes of foam the waters pass. Soon through the vale by zephyrs fanned, Tortuously they flow o'er silvery sand.

Through banks with lowly cresses crowned, Then roll with gentle cadenced sound. That softly falls on anguished hearts— Deep pierced by Sorrow's paintial darks— As from saintly lips falls comfort rare On souls reclaimed from dark Despute.

They tumble along, till loff in the bay Their monotone murmurs do away. Sweet Creek! oft by thy water's rin-In sunht morn or evening dim,

Whilst Turmoil slept and Silence to i Carressingly on mount and dell— 1 lingered long, well pleased to feel Thy kindly influence o'er me steal,

Like transitory gleams of mirch O'er hearts with grier crushed down to earth. Farewell, fair stream! companion dear, My bosom friend of one bright year. Hills, sombre, bleak flow'r bewelled dell. Ye scenes of joy, farewell, farewell!

The epitaph of the Marquis of Montrose, wirtten by himself, which appears in Mowbray Morr's recent blegraphy. is remarkably appropriate for the present day elemationists:

Scatter my ashes, strew them in the air-Lord, since Thou knows where all these atoms are.

The most beautiful and touching music ever written to a large ramber of Felicia Hemans' most lovely songssongs of many lands, songs of all the domestic affections-was composed by her sister, Miss M. A Summer Room.

A room suggestive of a forest glade has been devised by an ingenious woman whose fate it is to have to remain !

in town all summer, yet who, nothing daunted, has devised a means of keeping cool despite the heat and which her very strong imagination will materially aid in the scheme.

By a combination of pale green paper, grass mats and wicker furniture, she expects to delude herself into the belief that she is in the depths of piney woods when in reality she is not five minutes away from High street.

She has had the wail papered with a pale green covering, on which loose ferns seem to nod to each other as they do at the edge of a brook. A deep dado of the curious woven grass mats is execedingly unique and adds much to the effect.

On the floor, green and white matting with rugs such as photographers use to represent griss, and rattan bounging chairs fided with great case-inviting enshiors make the retreat unusually acceptable at all times, but more especially so when signifies are bowed and the summer sun pelts down into the glowing payements. With cooling dilinks and much light literature the owner of this artifician hower nopes to weather through the days when she is usually to be found for away from the busy haut.ts of men in communion with Nature's own alluring and attractive seit.

Father Mollinger is Dead.

Rey. Father Mollinger, of Troy Hill. Allegheny, Pa., died on Wednesday afternoon. He became very sick on Monday, but nerved himself to do all that he could for the pligrims to St. Anthony's shrine. He broke down, however, and had to take to his bed. He continued to grow worse, and the docters who had been summones to attend him concluded to perform a voperation on him for the reief of a ru ture which happened to him some years ago. Afterwards he was too weak to rally, and peacefully passed away, surrounded by the priests who had assisted him at Monday's services and a tew other friends.

When the people who had come to be healed heard or his death, great was their distress.

Rev. S. G. Mollinger was born in Holland nearly three score and ten years ago. He was well educated and was a doctor of medicine. He studied for the priesthood and was ordained. He came to this country about thirty-five years ago and exercised his ministry in Indiana and Pennsylvania. He was a man of rare ability and spoke seven languages fluently. He had traveled extensively and visited Rome and the Holy Land. In appearance he was patriarchal, having a private fortime he creeted in honor of the saint the beautiful chapel that adorns Troy Hill.--R. I. P.
