

courtesy and kind attention shown by Mr. Van Horne and all of the officials connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway could never be fully repaid, and that it was only through their efforts that our trip had been so thoroughly enjoyable and interesting. It is not too much to say that Mr. Van Horne literally verified the statement made in a letter to the writer prior to the commencement of our journey ; that statement was that the Canadian Pacific Railway was at the disposal of the writer to come and go on as he willed, and all that he had to do was to command. Mr. Van Horne's generous hospitality was certainly thoroughly appreciated by every member of the party, and will never be forgotten by the writer.

THE END.
