Vocal Society's Concert.

The debutante of the evening, Miss Florence Mabel Glover, a very young girl, treated the audience to an agreeable surprise. The young lady has a brilliant soprano voice, and she sang, the Staccato Polka and the scena Robert toi que J'aime from Robert le Diable with surprising executive ability for one so young. She has wonderful self-possession, and is evidently well fitted for the stage or concert platform. But if her artistic maturity should fulfil the promises of her success as a student she has a bright and successful career before her. The Robert toi que j'amie, given as an encore, was certainly an ambitious attempt, but Miss Glover nevertheless acquitted herself with a credit beyond general expectations.

Vocal Society's Concert.

Miss Florence Mabel Glover, a very young Member of the Society, won a warm reception, and sang Mulder's Staccato Polka very effectively for so young a performer, and was greeted with tremendous applause, and had to respond to a genuine encore.

Vocal Society's Concert.

This was the first appearance as a soloist of Miss Florence Mabel Glover, a member of the Society's chorus. She simply took the audience by storm with her treatment of Mulder's difficult composition the Staccato Polka, "Veni Venie Ognor." Her voice has force, animation, refinement and range, which makes future distinction an absolute certainty for this gifted soprano. Miss Glover is quite young, but, if promise means anything, she will yet be famous. Meanwhile the Vocal Society have a prize. She too, received many boquets, and the applause which accompanied their bestowal from all parts of the house was the most enthusiastic accorded to any of the performers.
