

Asclepiadæ from that day to this no name shines brighter, ancient or modern, than that of Hippocrates, the model physician, the Father of Medicine, Ancient and Modern, with his matchless aphorisms, and his oath of professional fealty and obligation, still a model of all that is high-minded and self-obliterating in him whose life work is the caring for his sick and miserable fellows. It would almost seem that no physician could reach his best development who has not at some time come under the spell of the people and the art and the literature that bred Hippocrates, and who cannot with these as part of his experience say of himself, as Tennyson makes Ulysses say: "I am a part of all that I have met."
