

CONTENTS

xv

	PAGE
Development of Philosophy since Kant in England: Herbert Spencer, T. H. Green, F. H. Bradley, . . .	138
"Pragmatism" as a method of defending religion. It rests upon two untenable assumptions: (1) that nothing is verifiable except "scientific" fact; (2) that there is an absolute opposition of faith and knowledge, . . .	141
James, in his philosophy of religion, falls back on the "subliminal consciousness," and reduces the object of religion to "something larger than ourselves," or perhaps a "collection" of finite selves. This concep- tion of religion results in an abstraction, and ignores the higher elements of religious experience. Thus St. Paul is admitted to be a religious genius because of his "visions" instead of his "prophecy." The "sub-conscious" life really lower than the conscious. The sense in which "experience" is the basis of religion,	149
Note on the Pragmatic conception of Truth,	158

LECTURE SEVENTH

CHRISTIANITY AND HISTORY

First Type of religion, second subdivision. Professor Harnack the representative of the "historical view." His kinship with Professor James. His doctrine con- nected with that of Ritschl, himself a follower of Schleiermacher,	165
The history of dogma is for Harnack an obscuration and "secularization" of the essence of religion, as found in Jesus Christ and his Gospel. Religion is a life, not a doctrine. Aim of the historian is to discover the kernel of religion by an examination of the facts of history. This kernel consists in the "Kingdom of God" as present here and now: of God the Father and the infinite value of the human soul; of the higher righteousness and the New Commandment of love,	167