well to bear in mind, when Mansfield appears here next week at the Grand Opera House in "King Henry V.," that the curtain will rise at 7.45. This means that the tableau curtains will part at this hour punctually, and disclose Rumor at this hour punctually, and disclose Rumor Gainsville—R B Rowe and William D means that the tableau curtains with part at this hour punctually, and disclose Rumor as Chorus, and that the overture will have been ended before this hour. To expedite the handling of the stage settings in "Henry V." Mr. Mansfield brings a specialty expert stage corps of 23 workmen. The final curtain will fall on the grand tableau of the betrothal of King Harry and Princess Kate, surrounded by the royal courts of France and England, in the Catherial of Troyes, at a few minutes after 11 o'clock. Much of the original text was cut by Mr. Mansfield in making the acting version, tho he has not touched a line of the delightful comedy in which the play abounds. Except for the inspiring battles and sieges and processions, "Henry V." is practically all a comedy. The King Harry, or Halash his chums called him, if not "feflow with the best king," was "the best king of good fellows." Mr. Ernest Seton Thompson's lectures on Wild Animals are so entirely new and full of interest that immense audiences gather to hear him everywhere. Such will undoubtedly be the case when he lectures in Massey Music Hall to-day, afternoon and evening. His stereopticon pictures some of them from photographs, others from his own drawings, add much to the effectiveness of his talk, and delight the children. He shows bears, foxes, covotes. dren. He shows bears, foxes, coyotes, rabbits, prairie dogs, deer and elk. and the queer tracks wild animals make in the snow. But the most unique feature is the ecturer's imitation of animal cries and alls to their little ones. They are quite ndescribable, and give one an eerle sensation of wildness and remoteness from civilization. The subject for the after-neon lecture at 3.30 is "Wild Animals I Have Known," and for the evening per-fermance at 8.15, "Wild Animals at Home." The novel, picturesque and interesting qualities of Mr. Thompson's lectures are Writing of the deceased in The Forester "Meg" says: Oxford days over, Dr. Oron-hyatekha, like the man in the Bible, "married him a wife," selecting her from among his own race. Mrs. Oronhyatekha has the distinction among her people of having been well-born, since she is the great-granddaughter of Captain Joseph Brent, the celebrated head chief of the Mohawks who, anticipating a rist in value of Mani-toba farm lands, are securing locations of revolutionary war fame. She is an edu-and endeavoring to dispose of their pro-perty in their own states, when they will thusiasm in all she undertakes, and she undertakes much. In her the Doctor has found a ready sympathizer and a capable helpmate. To them have been born several children, only two having lived to manhood and womanhood.
