LIV-Neil's Surprise.

"Anne! By jove, you look all played out!"

Sympathy and a vast kindness lay in Mr. Saunders' pleasant voice. He brought an air, too, into the shabby little lounge that seemed to transform the place. It came from another and a more luxurious vorid.

Surprise.

for a moment. I was foolish enough to back a horse in the races today, and I want to see if he has won."

I drank my tea. It was strong, and hot, and did me good.

When I had finished, Mr. Saunders poured me out another cup. Then he porceeded with the reading of his paper.

"Patriarch' has won! Now isn't that the place. It came from another and a more luxurious vorid.

"I—I feel a little tired." I tried to force a smile, but falled. I was desperately conscious of my faded looks.

"Come, sit down here. And let me to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And to do? A little dinner at the Ritz? And the little dinner at the Ritz?

"Come, sit down here. And let me order you a cup of tea. I'm sure you need it. Then, afterwards, perhaps you'll let me take you out to dinner?"

I allowed myself to be led over to a sofa in a dim corner, and sat down jerkily, because my legs suddenly gave way, from sheer fatigue.

You'll saunders placed some cushions at my back, hunted till he found a footstool, placed it under my feet, then went to order tea.

I was glad of the momentary respite. For a great lump was in my throat, so that I couldn't speak a word. He did not return until the tea arrived, which was comparatively quickly.

You look better now. There's shade more color in your cheeks. Now o't you tell me all about this two do? A little dinner at the Ritz? Air then a show? Or would you like dance?"

I gave a wintry smile.

"It's awfully kind of you, and I appreciate it, Mr. Saunders. But the times are all over and done with, whe i'm concerned. I'm a—a worker now on a half-sob, despite my effort steady it.

PEDRO IN OVER-THE-MOON-LAND.

(Part Two.)

Over the moon Pedro had sailed, and he felt himself going down and down again. Suddenly there was a big blaze of light and he drifted down onto a grassy plot that bounced him up and down again until he was quite dizzy.

When he stopped bouncing he looked about him with surprise. There stood Mrs. Moo Cow laughing as hard as she could at him. "My, you did look funny!" she laughed. "What made you follow me up here?"

"I don't know," Pedro answered truthfully, for he was a bit bewildered when he took the leap over the moon. "Have you seen anything of the dish and the spoon?"

"Indeed, I have," answered the cw.. "It clattered past me just a minute ago. He, ho, what's this?" There was a sound of music and the next to land there was Mrs. Tabby Cat, still playing the fiddle.

"Stop that noise," ordered Mrs. Moo Cow. "It was that silly playing that caused me to jump over the moon in the first place."

"I know it was," answered Mrs. Tabby Cat. "This is a magic fiddle and whoever hears it play has to jump over the moon back." "Screamed Mrs. Moo Cow. "the county with the only pudding spoon we had in the house."

"A cat has no proper place in the world," said Pedro disdainfully, for he had a great contempt for Mrs. Tabby. "This isn't the world, young dog," Mrs. Tabby said coolly, "as you will soon find out to your sorrow."
