The full light streamed in through the cost stades, is seen arrise at blew freshly across the houselope, and on the window sill a band of grimy, joyous sparrows twittered and preened themselves. In the middle of the room stood Loder. His coat was off, and round him on chairs and floor lay an array of waistcoats, gloves and ties.

For a space Chilcote stood in the doorway staring at him, then his lips partand out whether I sat in the morning ed and he took a step forward. "Loder," he said anxiously, "Loder, what are you going to do?"

Loder turned. His shoulders were stiff, his face alight with energy. "I'm going back," he said, "to unrayel the tangle you have made."

CHAPTER XXVIII. ODER'S plan of action was arrived at before he reached Trafalgar square. The facts of the case were simple. Chilon the bureau in the morning room of Grosvenor square. By an unlucky chance Lillian Astrupp had been shown up into that room, where me had re-mained alone until the moment that Eve, either by request or by accident, had found her there. The facts resolved themselves into one question:
hat use had Lillian made of those solitary moments? Without deviation, Loder's mind turned toward one answer. Lillian was not the woman to lose an opportunity, whether the space at her command was long or

"If you'll wait in the white room, eir," he said, "I'll inform her ladyship."

Chilcote was evidently a frequent and a favored visitor.

In this manner Loder for the secondtime entered the house so unfamiliar-and yet so familiar in all that it sugand yet so familiar in all that it suggested. Entering the drawing room, he had leisure to look about him. It was a beautiful room, large and lofty. Luxury was evident on every hand, but it was not the luxury that pails or offends. Each object was graceful and possessed its own intrinsic value. The atmosphere was too effeminate to appeal to him, but he acknowledged the barte and artistic delicary it conwawed. taste and artistic delicacy it conveyed.

Almost at the moment of acknowledsment the doer opened to admit Lillian.

"I thought it would be you," she said nigmatically.

Loder came forward. "You expected

Either, like himself, she was fishing for information or she was deliberately playing with him. In his perplexity he stanced across the room toward the areplace.

Lillian saw the look. "Won't you sit flown? she said, indicating the couch.

He looked quickly at the delicate face, the green eyes somewhat obliquely set, the unreliable mouth, and instantly he inclined to the latter theory. The conviction that she possessed the telegram filled him suddenly, and with it came the de-sire to put his belief to the test-to know beyond question whether her smiling unconcern meant malice or nere entertainment. "When you first came into the room," he said quietly, "you said I thought it would be you." Why did you say that? Again she smiled—the smile that might be malicious or might be merely amused. "Oh," she answered at last, "I only meant that though I had been hold Jack Chilcote wanted me, it wasn't

After her statement there was a pause. Loder's position was difficult. instinctively convinced that, strong in the possession of her proof, she was enjoying his tantalized discomfort, he yet waved the actual evidence that should set his suspicions to rest. Acting upon the desire, he made a new beginning. "Do you know why I came?" he asked.

She laughed and thatted and seemed in high spirits as we crossed the hall, and she was still smilling as she waved to me from hen motor. But then, Leder-then, as I stood in the hall, it all came to me suddenly. I remembered that Lillian must have been alone in the morning them before live found her! I remembered the telegram! I van back to the room, meaning to question live as to how long Lillian had been alone, but she had left file room. I ran to the bureau—but the telegram wasn't there!" asked.

Lillian looked up innocently. "It's se sand to be certain of anything is this world," she said. "But one is always at liberty to guess."

Again he was perplexed. Her attitude was not quite the attitude of one who controls the game, and yet.— He leaked at her with a pursued separative. coked at her with a puzzled scrutiny. His color was still high, but not of annoyance. His sus-pense was transformed into unpleasant certainty, but the exchange left him surer of himself. His perplexity had ropped to a quiet sense of self reliance. His paramount desire was for self-solitude in which to prepare for the task that lay before him—the most con-genial task the werld possessed—the unraveling of Chilcote's tangled skeins. unraveling of Chilcote's tangled akeina. Looking into Lillian's eyes, he smiled. "Goodby," she said, holding out his hand. "I think we've finished—for to-day."

CHAPTER XXIX. oDhis rame of make pelaft Cadogan gardens was peculiar. Once more he was living in the present—the force or hilarating present, and the point his mind was satisfied. Lillian was a matter that as yet was shape-less in his mind; nevertheless the dan-ger, the sense of impending condict, had a savor of life after the inaction strength and capacity had re to the appeal.

His step was firm and his bearing assured as he turned into Grosvenous square and walked toward the familian ous and tenacious as any vice. For one moment on the night of his great speech as he leaned out of Chilcote's carriage and met Chilcote's eyes Loder had seen himself and under the shock of revelation had taken decisive action But in the hours subsequent to that action the plausible, inner veice had whispered unceasingly, soothing his wounded self esteem, rebuilding stone by stone the temple of his egotism, un-til at last when Chilcote, panic stricken at his own action, had burst into him rooms ready to plead or to coerce he had found no need for either coercion or entreaty. By a power more subtle and effective than any at his command Loder had been prepared for his coming-unconsciously ready with an acquiescence before his appeal had been made. It was the fruit of this preparat strengthened his step and steadled his hand as he mounted the steps and epened the hall door of Chilcote's house on that eventful afternoon.

The dignity, the air of quiet solidity, impressed him as it never failed to do as he crossed the large hall and ascendad the stairs—the same stairs that he had passed down almost as an outcast not so many hours before. He was filled with the sense of things regained. Belief in his own star lifted him, as it had done a hundred times before in these same surroundings.

He quickened his steps as the sensation came to him. Then, reaching the best of the stairs, he turned directly toward Bive's sitting room and, gaining the door, knocked. The strength of his engerness, the quick beating of his pulse as he waited for a response, sur-prised him. He had told himself many times that his passion, however strong; would never again conquer as it had done two nights ago, and the fact that he had come thus candidly to Eve's room was to his mind a proof that temptation could be dared. Neverthe has there was something disconcerts to a strong man in this mately physic perturbation, and when Eve's voice came to him, giving permission to en-ter, he paused for an instant to steady himself. Then, with sudden decision, he opened the door and walked into The blinds were partly drawn, there fire glowed warmly in the grate. He noted these things carefully, telling himself that a man should always be alertly sensible of his surroundings. Then all at once the nice balancing of detail suddenly gave way. He forgot everything but the one circumstance that Eve was standing in the window, her back to the light, her face toward him. With his pulses beating faster and an unsteady sensation in his brain, he moved forward, holding out his hand.

"Eve"— he said below his breath.
But Eve remained motionless. As he came into the room she had glanced at him-a glance of quick, searching que "Because I knew."

The full remembrance of the scene in the brougham had surged up at sight of her-had risen a fleres, unquenchable recollection. "Eve"— he began again in a new, abrupt tone. And then it was that Eve showed herself in a fresh light. From his en-trance into the room she had stayed motionless, saye for her first glance of acute inquiry but now her demeanor changed. For almost the first time in Loder's knowledge of her the vitality and force that he had vaguely appreended below her quiet, serene exterior sprang up like a fiame within whose radius things are illuminated. With a quick gesture, she turned toward him, her warm color deepening, her eyes suddenly alight.
