But my mother wass saying it will be a wind and of those letters was a great commotion.

"Yes, I am ferry well whatever, Duncan Lewis," said she without any great concern.

"Chapter III.

Allasa's PROMISE.

From time to time, at considerable intervals, news caine of the young man in Glasgow, and it was good news. He was getting on well at college; his master was in every way considerate; he was ready to help him to some sort of work better suited for him. But at the end of those letters which Ailasa read aloud to her mother, the girl said to herself, "And why does he not come back to see his old friends?"

One day there was a great commotion

The young man was in no hurry to protest against her taking all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly; and the mother thought him a prudent lad to think of his clother.

"Ailasa," said he, as they walked and angry to help him to some sort of work better suited for him. But at the end of those letters which Ailasa read aloud to her mother, the girl said to herself, "And why does he not come back to see his old friends?"

One day there was a great commotion

The young man was in no hurry to protest against her taking all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly; and the mother thating all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly: and the mother thating all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly: and the mother taking all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly: and the mother taking all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly: and the mother taking all this trouble. On the contrary he accepted her offer eagerly: a

"That is a good thing, Duncan Lewis," she answered. "You have kept off the drink like a prudent man. It is not every one has so much money on the bank at Stornoway."

Three months went by before they got a letter. It was on the evening of a warm autumn day that Ailasa saw the solitary figure of the postman come over the level moors; and in the distance—in the midst of the glow of rich solitary figure of the glow of the glo leena and Darroch, and if I shall see them any more. That is all the news. If you would send me a letter with the news, that would be a great pleasure to me. I was thinking I would like to send you a book if you will take it from me; but if you do not wish to take the book from me you will tell me about that in the letter with all the news. And I hope your mother is very well; and I remain, dear Ailasa, your faithful friend, Alister Lewis."

The young girl did not look at the book. She read and re-read the letter, and har face was full of pride and gladness. Had he not prospered famously in the far city, where they had already so far recognized the erudition he had picked up in Darroch that they were going to admit him to the great University? And he had maintained himself, keeping himself free from debt, and he is a word of the second that is more in the bank at Stornoway; and I was saying that I would come and look after the farm at Carn-Slean, "That is ferry good of you, Duncan Lewis," said Ailasa, with some surprise; he was not ordinarily generous.

"But this is it, Ailasa," said he was not ordinarily generous.

"But this is it, Ailasa," said he was saying—I was saying that I would come and he far on one to take care of you if your mother was ill. And I was saying—I was saying the tarm at Carn-Slean, and they walked hand in hand, as they had often done in their childhood. They spoke little, but there was a proud and confident look on the young man's face. Mrs. Macdonald like to he word I was wishing to speak to you, Ailasa Macdonald."

The girl looked more and more astonished, and then turned, as if for guidance, to her mother. Mrs. Macdonald had began to peel some potatoes for supper, and was apparently not listening.

"To be your wife, Duncan Lewis' Allasa," said he word I was wishing to speak to you, allasa Macdonald."

The girl looked more and more astonished, and then turned, as if for guidance, to her mother was apparently not listening.

"To be your wife, Duncan Lewis and the was and town councillore to see me ? That would be ferry kind of you, Duncan, if I could believe it. But my mother wass saying it will be see his old friends?"

One day there was a great commotion Durrach people, and she will be ferry glad to see you this day—ch, yes, she will be ferry glad to see you this day—ch, yes, she will be ferry glad to see you."

The fisherman stood embarrassed and uncertain. He would liked to have said something more; but he had been regarding the open letter and the gill-edged book lying on her lap, and angry suspicions were crowding in on his mind. So he suddenly left her, and we were to the house, where he found Mrs. Madonald stirring up the peat-fire. She rapilly dusted a stool for him, and bade him sit down.

"It is a very fine evening, this evening," said he.

"It is a very fine evening, this evening," said he.

"It is a very fine evening, this evening," said he.

"It is a very fine evening, this evening," said he.

"It is a stranger thing," and you very well? And I was of in the Gaelic; and thereafter they spoke in that tongue.

"It is a stranger thing," and the eldest one of my family. I have done well in the world, Mrs. Macdonald. I have more than $2.20 in the bank at Stornoway,"

A list of Agents in this section of the Province will be for appended, and farmers are requested to ask in mation of them relative to our Mowers in use their respective localities, which will estableyond doubt their unquestionable supercrity; any other mower to be had in our market.

The facility of procuring all parts or pieces we my other mower to be had in our market.

The facility of procuring all parts or pieces wit
a a nominal length of time must show beyond t hadow of a deubt the claims such an enterpr as upon the farmers of the Maritime Provinces.

For the coming harvest of 1877 we will man
acture LARGELY in excess of our nur DETS of last season, and trust that our gro ge enterprise may find such inducements held o
of it as will be commensurate with its merits.

Let it be remembered we have no hesitation
