EARLY MORNING FIRE.

About 3.45 o'clock this morning flames were seen issuing from a barn on the eastern side of Lower Coye Silp, owned by M. J. Moran, and occupied by Mr. Turner, Daniel Hattield and James King. An alarm sent in from Box 45 was quickly responded to. The roof and lower section of the been was completely destroyed. Mr. Turner got his horse out all right, but James King lost his valuable working horse. Hatfield was fortunate in not having a beast in the barn at the time.

I believe it is generally conceded that even the strongest opponents of Mr. Biair have expressed their approval of his action in this matter; and from expressions of both sides, outside of editorial comment, it will be found that the general voice of the people will be with him in his determination to act honestly and openly for their best interests.

The ministers, outside of Mr. Blair, have clearly shown a disposition to arrange this railway scheme without consulting his practical experience and considerations in railway matters, thus discovering there is no desire on their part to be concerned about the people, Where is there a man in the whole country who could have handled the people's railway as Mr. Blair has done? There is not a single member outside of one representative who could successfully take his place—hence the combination of incompetents against him, for they have certainly ignored the only man who could intelligently direct them if his experience and advice were appealed to. Party and politics in this serious era of our existence will have no weight with an intelligent community in turning down Mr. Blair, for both conservatives and liberals have clearly expressed themselves that we have a man of honest worth and wealth of statesmanship, that will accrue to the public's best interests throughout wait and see how
