JURY DISAGREED

The adjourned county court met on Tuesday morning at ten o'clock, when the Torryburn case was resumed. Samuel Clifford, the turnkey of the jail, gave evidence that Doherty was brought into the jail and a doctor was brought to attend him. Edward Doherty was then called and gave his evidence as to the fracas. The court then adjourned until 2 o'clock.
At 3 o'clock all the evidence was in, and John Kerr moved for the discharge of M. Daley and E. Doherty, on the ground that they were not acting together to do grievous bodily harm to Sergt. Campbell, quite the contrary. His honor failed to see that the grounds were sufficient. He said that it seemed as if Sergt. Campbell was the man, from the evidence of the mee, to be indicted. Mr. Kerr-"Sergt. Campbell is no indicted, but I wish to God he were." He also remarked that the sergeant was a disgrace to the force, but admitted that he was hasty in this, when his honor said that from the evidence in it appeared that Campbell was a credit to the force, an able, plucky of-

THRILLING ADVENTURES.

The Death of Mrs. Green of New Glasgow Recalls the Privateering Days.

(Eastern, N. S., Chronicle.) Mrs. Green, whose death, at an adanced age, we recorded in the last issue of the Chronicle, was a daughter of the late James McKenzie of the Narrows, E. R. She was born at Strathspay, Inverness-shire, Scotland, in 1805. When she was seven years of age her father and family decided to emigrate to Canada, but no vessel being available at the time they took bassage at Port Glasgow, in August, 112, on board the brig Dorothy C.,

Capt. McCoul, bound for Nova Scotia. Britain and the United States being at war at the time, it was necessary for passenger vessels to have a convoy, so they were sent to the Cove of Cork (Queenstown) to procure one. After a week's delay a convoy was engaged, and in company with three vesels sailed for their destina-On the third day out the convoy die-

S. flag and ordered to heave to. An officer and several armed men went on oard and declared themselves privaeers under license from the U. S. government, which was false, as it was found out they had no license. They plundered the passengers, taking everything of money or valuables. Some lost all they owned; others were more fortunate. Among the latter was the family we are writing about. Nothing further of note occurred until making land near Cape Canso, when they were again overhauled, this time by the schooner Revenge, a regular licensed privateer. They were made prisoners, a prize crew put on board the brig and ordered to Boston. They were treated handsomely, both on the vessel and in Boston, where they arrived in due course. After a few days' delay they were exchanged and arrived in Halifax. The first man to greet them as they landed on the wharf was their old friend, Capt. Mc-
