I spoke like a man deadly in earnest, as in truth I was, for his words had made me feel that my position might be more serious than I had imagined. My earnestness impressed him too, for he turned somewhat hurriedly to me and said:

"Have I not said that you may be a youth worth considering? But, look you, before we go further into this matter I must know with assurance how we stand. For, let me tell you this: if you play the game which is in your mind it will not be for boys' stakes. Neither will it be a game easy to play."

I know he would have given much not to have spoken these words, but they had escaped him while under the influence of the words I had spoken.

"Enough to say that I do not know," I replied, "and moreover, I am not the only Englishman who can speak the French tongue."

He saw he had taken the wrong road, and he sought to retrace his steps.

"Let us understand each other," he repeated.

"Methinks we are understanding each other with great haste," I replied. "Mark were I write the words I had spoken.

At this I was silent, for I did not wish

You would know first more of the woman whom you name 'chistance, then you would know more of the men who sent her here. That springs rom young blood and a boy's heart. But that is not all. There is the man's brain as well as the boy's heart to be considered. Let me think of that. You, like thers, have heard the story of the King's marriage, but, unlike others, you have been ble to locate the place where the sceret is kept. You desire to possess it. Why? Because, like a thousand others, you desire to have power over the King. How came you to find out this place? What is the purpose you have in your aird? We will not try to find out this place? What is the purpose you have in your aird? We will not try to find out this place? What is the purpose you have in your aird? We will not try to find out this place? What is the purpose you have in your aird? We will not try to find out this place? What is the purpose you have in your aird? We will not try to find out who I am, where I spend my days or my nights. You will say nothing about me to man, woman, nor chua. If you hear aught at any time or at any place of the fear of death," I answered. "He will keep to it under all circumstances, unless the man to whom he hath the profited his right to have the promise kept."

"Ah, then, look here, look at me, straight in the eyes—that's it! If I tell promise me this. First, you will not try to find out who I am, where I spend my days or my nights. You will say nothing about me to man, woman, nor chua. If you hear aught at any time or at any place of the old man who hath been seen under strange circumstances at Pycroft, you will say naught, nor show by sign of any sort that you have ever heard or seen him." How came you to find out this place?
What is the purpose you have in your nind? You will not tell me. Nevertheless I shall find out. What is you name? Well, icr the present one name will do as well is another. So far so good. Now, then, for the other 'side. Here I am. Who am I? th, who knows? Elijah Pycroft once lived ere. Some say he died and was buried. But was he? If he was, who am I? Am I Elijah Pycroft come to life again? For years this old house hath been shunned as hough it were the house of pestilence.

hough it were the house of pestilence. Why? Witches' revels are held here, dark leeds are done here. Spirits of darkness haunt this place. The whole question had been settled so I had told the man nothing, and my work accomplished that I feared I realized. And yet all seemed straight forward. I had touched the old man's fear, and he had yielded. His great dread secret of his name and identity. Well, what were his name and identity to me more than I knew. And yet all might be simple. I believed that he was afraid to make use of the secret he guarded, and that he was eager to obtain the services
