THE MAN WHO FAILS.

Paul Laurence Dunbar, The world is a snob, and the man who

Is the chap for its money's worth; And the lust for success causes half of the sins

That are cursing this brave old earth, For it's fine to go up and the world's Is sweet to the mortal ear; But the man who fails in a noble

Is-a hero that's no less dear. Tis true enough that the laurel crown Twines but for the victor's brow; For many a hero has lain him down

With naught but the cypress bough, There are gallant men in the losing And as gallant deeds are done, As ever graced the captured height,

Or a battle grandly won. We sit at life's board with our nerves high strung, And we play for the stake of fame,

And our odes are sung and our banners hung,
For the man who wins the game. But I have a song of another kind Than breaths in these fame-wrought

An ode to the noble heart and mind Of the gallant man who fails!

The man who is strong to fight his fight, And whose will no front can daunt, If the truth be truth and the right

be right,
Is the man that the ages want,
Tho' he fail and die in grim defeat,
Yet he has not fled the strife,
The transfer of Farth will seem more And the house of Earth will seem more For the perfame of his life.

In an attempt made last Friday night to wreck a passenger train in the Canadian Pacific railway yards at the Canadian Facilic railway yards at Windsor, two cars left the track and delayed traffic for over two hours. It was found that the lock on the switch had been broken and the switch turned. The switch light had also been extinguished. It is thought to have been tinguished. It is thought to have been the work of tramps.

QUITE AN EXPERIENCE.

An attempt was made last week to rob the jewelry store of George Carhart, Pontiac, Mich, uncle of E. R. Snook, of Chatham. Hampson Holmes, son of John Holmes, Adelaide street, is Mr. Carhart's jeweler and he sleeps over the store. Writing in reply to a card from his father who had learned of the incident from Con. Mains, Hampson says:—"I received your postal this morning. We had quite a little time here during Buffalo Bill's show. He has the worst gang of toughs on the road. has the worst gang of toughs on the road. They were robbing the farmers in broad daylight on Main street. I was within four feet of the fellows who tried to break into our store and could have killed one if I had wanted to. They were proving the window our store and could have killed one if I had wanted to. They were prying the window up. I telephoned the sheriff and he came down. He told me I should have blown the burglar's brains out. We are having heavy bars put on the windows so as to make my midnight visitors all the trouble to get in we possibly can. With the bars on the outside and me on the inside I don't think they will attempt it again unless they have a whole attempt it again unless they have a whole regiment with them."

SOME QUEER BABIES

HE old mother frog sat on a stone in the middle of the brook, just as John and Harry came flown to sail their new boats. "Go chunk! Go chunk! Go chunk!" she cried, and with a leap and a splash down sne umped into the water.

"Oh!" said John. "How I wish I could see her again, and her baby trog!" "Baby frogs?" said Harry, with a laugh. "I guess you will never see any baby frogs that look like their mother." John was a city boy, darry had lived in the country all his life and he thought himself much wiser than John. "Look there!" said Harry, pointing in the stream to some little, wriggling black things which looked like tiny kites with tails. "Those are the trog's bables. They don't look much like their mother, do they?" "I do not believe it," said John.

know something, if I am from the city. "Well, do not get angry, and I will prove it to you," said Harry. "And as it is queer and wonderful, I will show you how these baies grow from the very beginning.'

So Harry took off his shoes and stockings and waded into the brook, telling John to run back to the house and get a bowl or preserve jar. Then Harry looked carefully among the short, thick grass which was growing along the side of the brook. He found several leaves which were covered with a thick, clear jelly, and in the centre of each piece was a tiny black speck. This was the frog spawn or frog's eggs, as all animal life comes from an egg of some kind.

The boys gathered the frog spawn carefully and put it in the bowl, which they filled up half way with water, put some stones in the bottom, and then carried the bowl home. Each day they watched to see what would hap-

In a week they found that the spawn had broken off into little pieces, and that each black speck had grown larger and had a little tail. At this time the jelly served as food for the tiny tadpole. The tadpoles grew very fast the next few days and had little bunches of feathery gills on each side of their heads. How they swam and wriggled about in the water, as if swimming and wriggling were the only things to do in the world! It was funny to watch them dart through the water as quick as a flash,

The feathery outside gills were used to breathe with, just as fish breathe with their gills, for these babies were of the nature of fish now. But soon these little gills fell off and a broad mouth and two eyes appeared in the head.

One day as John was watching his pets he suddenly called out: "Oh! Harry, I am arraid that some of the 'tads' are sick, for I see little lumps on their sides." Harry did not reply; he only smiled in a peculiar way, as if he knew something that he would not tell. A few days later John called out in great excitement, "Legs! Legs!" Yes, surely, just where the little lumps had been there were now jointed hind legs. In another week the short fore legs had appeared, but, curiously enough, the tail, instead of growing longer, had seemed to shrink smaller, and the little creatures did not look as much like tadpoles as before, and they began to look a little like frogs. "Didn't I tell you so?" said Harry. "Now do you not see for yourself?"

"Truly, you were right," replied John, "for they are growing like the old mother frog now. It is wonderful!" But, although he could see many wonderful changes going on from the outside, there were many changes going on inside that he could not see. At first the baby tadpole breathed by means of the little feathery gills, just like a fish, but when these gills fell oft it breathed by opening its mouth and swallowing some water, taking in the air from it, and letting the water run out of the two tiny slits on each side of its mouth. You can easily watch this, and see the young tadpole breathe this way when it is beginning to change. Then another wonderful thing happened, although you could got see it. The 'tad' was losing its fishlike nature, and so a heart and a pair of lungs developed inside of its body, so that it could breathe air as other animals. Now it was fast growing like young froggies seemed to like them, or they sat on them continually, and winked and blinked in the sunlight. At first the boys had fed them on a li tle cornmeal and fish food. Now they did not seem satisfied with this fare and wanted something more substantial. One day, as the boys were catching them, a fly came buzzing along and was very near one et the little frogs. In an instant the frog darted out its tongue; caught the fly, ate it for breakfast, and blinked around looking for more.

But are they doomed? Is not the suffering the result of conditions which under skillful treatment might be entirely cured? Thousands of women who had been great sufferers, have learned that suffering was unnecessary after using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It heals diseases of the delicate womanly organs and banishes the headache, back-ache and other aches which are the consequence of these diseases.

The Guile of Infant Guilelessness.

The guilelessness and sincerity of the infant mind, so popularly accept-ed admits of varied and alarming phenomena that wreck the temporary peace of many an innocent adult victim, says Demorest's.

Even the best little child in the world excited by company or novelty of environment, is liable to bring the blush of mortification to its mother's cheeks by a flaunting of factitious ignorance or by exclamations that mislead.

Contradiction of the irresponsible little offender, or explanation, find slim credence. The grown-ups who hear smile inwardly. Would a dear little smile inwardly. innocent like that be capable of misrepresenting? But the dear little innocent, stimu-
