Robert Burns was once standing on a long pier on the water front of Edinburgh. A well-known and wealthy merchant, walking by, stumbled and fell into the water. He could not swim and so sank. When he arose for the third time nobody dared to save him, but an old weather-beaten sallou, at the risk of his own life ran up the pier, and, jumping in rescued the man.

The gentleman had been worked over quite a while before he became conscious, and when he realized the situation he rewarded his rescuer with what in our money would amount to twenty-five cents. At this the crowd which had gathered, knowing his wealth, hooted and jeered. But Burns, who was standing by quieted them and said:

"Surely the gentleman knows what his life is worth!"

Let the greatest athlete have dyspepsia and his muscles would soon fail. Physical strength is derived from food. If a man has insufficient food he loses strength. If he has no food he dies. Food is converted into nutrition through the stomach to whate strength of the stomach to whate there food eaten is digested and assimilated. People can die of starvation who have abundant food to eat, when the stomach and its associate organs of digestion and nutrition do not perform their duty. Thus the stomach is really the vital organ of the body. If the stomach is weak" the body will be weak also, because it is upon the stomach the body relies for its strength. And as the body, considered as a whole, is made up of its several members and organs, so the weakness of the body as a consequence of "weak" stomach will be distributed among the organs which compose the body. If the body is weak because it is ill-nourished that physical weakness will be found in all the organs—heart, liver, kidneys, etc. The liver will be torpid and inactive, giving rise to billousness, loss of appetite, weak nerves, feeble or irregular action of heart, palpitation, dizziness, headache, backache and kindred disturbances and weaknesses.

It is not now for the first time that London's Council is proposing to take over the responsibility of lighting its streets and houses.
