Wife: "Is my hat on straight, dear?" Husband (in a hurry): "Oh, yes, quite straight."

Wife: "Are you sure?" Husband: "Yes, do come along."

Wife: "Oh, dear, I must go back. You see, it is not fashionable to wear this kind of a hat straight."

DEATH OF AGED LADY AT GREENFIELD

On Saturday evening at 6 o'clock Mrs. Mary Ann Wakem, widow of the late Robert Wakem, passed peacefully away. Mrs. Wakem was Greenfield's oldest resident, being eighty-five years of age. Mr. Wakem predeceased her about a year and a half ago.

Mrs. Wakem leaves to mourn four daughters, Mrs. B. McCain, Florenceville; Mrs. Wm. Peterson, Tracy Mills; Mrs. Warren Kinney, Brunswick; Mrs. John McLean, Washburn, Me.; also four sons, John of this place; Robert of Presque Isle, Me.; Jerry of Boston, Mass.; Malcolm of Norrington, Me.

Much sympathy is extended to the bereaved family.

717 POUND PORKER.

What might be described perhaps as the biggest pig in the world, was on Oct. 27th, converted into a porker by Mr. A. Shaw Lunn of Falmouth. When fully dressed and after hanging for three days the animal weighed 717 pounds. Before the butcher, Michael Warden operated on him, this elephantine pig weighed easily 750 lbs. His head alone tipped the scales at 113 pounds and his carcass contributed to the doughnut department of Mrs. Lunn's kitchen 4½ buckets of lard.—Windsor Tribune.

TALKLESS PHONE FOR DEAF.

One of the most recent devices for use in communication between deaf mutes is a talkless phone that conveys messages by means of an alphabet printed on electric bulbs, says Popular Science Monthly. As the operator presses the keys of a special typewriter, wired electrically, the corresponding letters are lighted, spelling out the message. The invention is the work of William E. Shaw of Cambridge who was stricken deaf and dumb by sickness at an early age.

CORN

Lift Off—No Pain!

Doesn't hurt one bit! Drop a little "Freezone" on an aching corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then shortly you lift it right off with fingers.

Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of "Freezone" for a few cents, sufficient to remove every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and the foot calluses, without soreness or irritation.

ANIMALS IN THE COURT

IN MIDDLE AGES EVEN WILD ANIMALS WERE TRIED.

Dog Was Brought Before Judge Morson in Ontario—Monkey Broke the Law—Chimpanzee Was Fined for Smoking—Doves Tried in Canada.

A dog once gave evidence in the Toronto Division Court and his testimony quickly decided a case. 'Twas a dispute between two men over the ownership of a collie. At length Judge Morson adopted the Solomon mode of justice and called for the animal to see if he would choose his rightful master. With a bark and a bound which quite scandalized the court attendants the canine romped into the room, instantly identifying by his show of affection, the man to whom he belonged. This episode at the Toronto City Hall ten years ago or more is brought to mind because in an American court in this year of grace, 1924, two human witnesses were called to give evidence concerning the good character or otherwise, of a dog. Under British law, a dog or horse is entitled to one bite or one kick without penalty. Should they transgress again the former fence counts against their masters and may in the case of the dog mean that animal's death.

During the Middle Ages and later, not their masters, but the animals themselves, were tried for any misbehavior with teeth, hoofs and claws or horns. Between 824 A.D. and 1906, says E. P. Evans, in his "The Criminal Prosecution and Punishment of Animals," 191 animals were tried. And this list does not include the trained chimpanzee which, on a one-night stand in Indiana, smoked a cigarette, thereby infracting a local law and incurring a fine of $5 which its owner had to pay. But Evans' list does include the case, in 1306, of two Swiss robbers who, with a gigantic dog, set upon, robbed and killed a traveller. Under Swiss non-capital punishment law, the robbers went to jail, but the dog which did the slaying was sentenced to death.

Turtle doves were brought to trial in French Canada two centuries or more ago, which sounds even more ridiculous than the case in old France when a sow and piglets were found guilty of killing a child; the sow was solemnly hanged by the neck, and the piglets let off on account of their youth. Cotton Mather tells of a trial which took place in New Haven in 1662 when feeling about witches was running high. The defendants included a cow, two heifers, three sheep and two sows. Back in 1452 in Europe sixteen cows and a goat were haled into court.

Then there was the ass at Nismes in 1768, which, wandering into a church and drinking holy water was hanged and burned for sacrilege. There was the Russian he-goat banished to Siberia. Dolphins were tried at Marseilles, caterpillars in Italy. Eels, gaddies, snails and serpents have appeared in court.

"If an ox gore a man or a woman that they die; then the ox shall be surely stoned and his flesh shall not be eaten," declared a medieval statute which stated further that if the owner knew beforehand that his man-killing animal was vicious then both he and the beast should perish. As early as the ninth century it was customary to try domestic animals in the criminal courts and wild creatures in the ecclesiastical courts; the latter court frequently decreeing banishment or exorcism. The summons was read three times at a place frequented by the accused when they were to defend themselves, the judgment went by default.

Often the courts showed no haste, and it has been suggested that they did not relish being shown up as unable to enforce their decrees. They had the undeniable right of another, however. It was established, for example, in the proceedings against the vineyards of Mount Cenis in the sixteenth century. The case dragged for 42 years and filled 29 books of proceedings, and in the end a plot of ground was set aside in perpetuity for the beetles, for it had been proved that they had the right to live.

Many an ingenious plea came from the counsel for such defendants. One such is still admirably spoken of in legal works. The lawyer was Bartholomew Chassance, and his argument made him a reputation which carried him to the presidency of the Parliament of Province. The trial was in August, 1552. The accused were rats. They did not appear at the first citation. Clearly they had not been properly summoned, said Bartholomew. They would have to be summoned in every parish.

Granted, but still they failed to come to court. But, said counsel, to obey meant for the rats virtually a migration. They would need time. Granted, but still no defendants frisked into court. Thereupon Bartholomew addressed the court: "Your Lordships, many of my clients are aged and infirm, and many are sick; they need more time." The learned judge in their furred gowns gravely consented. When again the trial day arrived and no rats, he pleaded: "My clients have heard the order and are eager to come, but fear the cats, which have also heard and lie in wait. The rats are entitled to the protection of the court in obeying the summons."

So the court ordered bonds put up for all the cats. But the cats were owned by the plaintiffs in the action, and the owners would give no bonds. So the case went to the defendants by default—and Chassance was a made man.

FREDERICTON

Three Rivers, Quebec, Has New Station

Citizens of Three Rivers, Quebec, regard the recent inauguration of the new Canadian Pacific Railway Station as marking a new epoch in the life of their city inasmuch as it affords proof of the status already attained by Trois-Rivieres as an industrial centre and of the greater prominence it is expected to occupy in the future. The new station building is the most up-to-date and magnificent of its kind in eastern Canada. Of its construction cost, not less than $200,000 represents the amount of money spent in Three Rivers. Some idea as to the way Three Rivers has developed may be gathered from a few remarks made by E. J. Hebert, first assistant general passenger agent, Canadian Pacific Railway, in proposing a toast at the banquet that marked the official opening. "Until 1875 navigation was the only transportation facility," he said. "Then the Northern Railway was built between Quebec, Three Rivers and Montreal, but it was not until 1905 that industries began to appear. With the opening of the St. Maurice Valley Railway trade developed rapidly. The towns of Shawinigan Falls, Grand Mere, Cap-de-la-Madeleine, La Gabelle, small hamlets in 1905, have become important industrial centres, with populations respectively of 12,000, 7,500 and 3,000 people, while Three Rivers itself has over 30,000 population now and is still growing."
