BRILLIANTS.

THE PAST.
I will throw off this dead and useless past,
As a strong runner, straining for his life,
Uncle a mantle to the hungry wind.
Alexander Smith.

LOVER'S SEPARATION.
O, for a falconer's voice,
To lure this tassel-gentle back again!
Bondage is borne, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave whose Echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than mine
With repetition of my Romeo's name.
Shakespeare.

BEAUTY.
Who hath not proved how feebly words essay
To fix one spark of beauty's heavenly ray?
Who doth not feel, until his falling sight
Faints into dimness with its own delight,
His changing cheek, his sinking heart confess
The might—the majesty of loveliness?
Byron.

A PERFECT WOMAN.
A being breathing thoughtful breath,
A traveller between life and death;
The reason firm, the temperate will,
Endurance, foresight, strength and skill;
A perfect woman, nobly planned,
To warn, to comfort, and to command;
And yet a spirit still, and bright,
With something of angelic light.
Wordsworth.

TIME.
Yes, and the sailless worlds, which navigate
The unutterable deep that hath no shore,
Will lose their starry splendours, soon or late,
Like taper quenched by him whose will is fate!
Yes, and the angel of eternity
Who numbers worlds, and writes their names
In light,
One day, O earth! I will look in vain for thee,
And start and stop in his unerring flight
Aid with the wings of sorrow and afflict—
Vell his impassion'd brow and heavenly tears.
Shelley Elliot.

The Foster Brother;

The Orphan of the Wreck.

CHAPTER IV.
THE TWO BROTHERS—THE FACTOR'S JOURNEY
—HOMEWARD BOUND.

This little bit of soliloquising gives the reader an idea of the character of Matthew Greigson, the factor on the estate of Ardgowan. A simple, honest, upright man was Matthew—clear-headed and warm-hearted—a straight-forward man; a man of integrity and probity. He was the manager of the estate when George Morrar bought it; and the West Indian planter had sense enough to see his worth and retain his services. The principle on which he managed was those of justice and liberality—justice towards the landlord, and liberality towards the tenants, whose rights he respected, and whose reasonable requests he never failed to give effect to. Every one had confidence in him, and respected him; his advice was asked in all emergencies; and his opinion and judgment were deferred to in most agricultural matters. Matthew Greigson was the friend of all, and all were friendly disposed towards him.

Such was the man, and such were his forebodings of the coming reign of Stephen Gibson at Ardgowan. The journey from Aberdeenshire to Ayrshire, so easily and speedily accomplished now-a-days, was a tedious undertaking at the time when the events of our story were in progress. Matthew Greigson required to perform it in a gig, and, as a horse had to accompany him, it was the afternoon of the second day when he drove up at the gate of the cottage in which Kenneth and Lucy had their temporary abode.

The appearance of the factor, and the sable plumes of the hearse nodding along the road, did not give them any surprise. They had on that day, and even on the day before, expected some such an arrival, and it was with a grave composed air that Kenneth walked down the garden to meet Matthew, whom he knew quite well, and with whom he had always been on friendly terms.

"Oh, Mr. Bruce, Mr. Bruce, this is a sad business," burst out Matthew, as he came forward and took Kenneth's outstretched hand.

"Very sad indeed, Mr. Greigson. There have been great changes in Glenfask since we left in the spring."

"Ay, sir, very great; but this is the worst of it. Mr. Morrar's time was run, but pair Maister George to be out off so sudden, and in such a cruel way. Yonder, I suppose, are the rocks where the wreck took place."

"Yes—yonder. You could not fancy, looking at them now, that such a dire calamity could have happened; but when the sea is in storm they present a terrible sight. Come into the cottage. Yonder is Lucy waiting in the porch to meet you."

The sight of Matthew brought tears to Lucy's eyes, and Matthew himself, when he saw her standing in the doorway with her baby in her arms and George at her side, required to cough down his emotion.

On the latter he bent a sad pitiful look. "What a bonny barn," he exclaimed; "is this the little orphan you saved from the wreck, Mr. Bruce?"

"How did you know that?" asked Kenneth; "I wrote nothing of the kind to Ardgowan."

"I read the full account in a Glasgow paper."

"Ah, yes; I forgot. A gentleman did
