emergency. The quarantine station, he stated, is low more perfectly equipped than eve before. It has an apparatus which thoroughly disinfects the whole ship with a powerful gas—a poison more deadly to the germ than the sulphur fumes, which until its introduction a short time ago, were always employed in the quarantine precautions.

Dr. Watt is firmly of the impression that more good can be done in preventing the spread of disease on the Japan coast than on this side of the Pacific. With black plague, symptoms develop authorities were hoping that they had effectually stamped out the disease, when it broke out anew in district No.

The disease, however, is again well in check there, but as for other ports, Dr. Watt fears the plague is even worse than has been represented. The present season, he says, has been an exceptionally dry one in China, and though worst month for plague passed May, there is still cause for anxiety in the prospects of short rice crop and
