Poetry.
Memories.
(For the Monitor.)
Oft when twilight's curtain falls, Shedding o'er the glass of day,
And the sunset's glowing splendour Fades from the west away;
Do I not gaze me backward, Down the corridors of time;
While such labyrinthine musing Echoes with fond memories' chime.
The flickering shadows deepen,
And the moon's pale form appears, Still shall I dwell upon the past,
And to the westward Thrills with songs of olden years;
And my enraptured listener Like a spirit wanders free, 'Till I seem in fancy living O'er those golden hours again.
First I saw a humble cottage, On the banks of some stream, Where in innocuous childhood I first saw the light of day.
There I saw the dear old heart,
When it was the heart of a boy,
When it was the heart of a man,
When it was the heart of a saint.
Once again I seem to wander Down my long-remembered Path, and to see the dear old heart,
When it was the heart of a boy,
When it was the heart of a man,
When it was the heart of a saint.
Soft, white hands my own are pressing,
In their clasp, so warm and true, Hands, whose touch, did once like magic,
Give to my heart its true repose, Murmuring voices float around me,
And I seem to see the dear old heart,
When it was the heart of a boy,
When it was the heart of a man,
When it was the heart of a saint.
From my tearful, upturned eye,
And unconsciously their breath From my parted lips; high;
As I start, and question self;
'Where are now those friends of youth?
All those dear, bright days so cherished, Will their sunlight come no more?
On no, no, those days have vanished, Every beam has fled at last,
On time's worn and grey page,
They are numbered with the past,
And the friends of my youth's companions Are numbered with the past.
Few, but few of them are near me, Some in distant climate zones, Some in the land of the living,
They have made themselves a home Somewhere upon the earth, Cried on to their created work, Some beneath its heavy bosom, Others in the air above.
And how many, O how many,
Nestle the sleeping willow,
Where the green turf grows above them, But we trust their souls are free.
Revel in the Home of Joy, Nought of earth can we molest them,
Or their happiness avail.
Soon God's loving hand will straighten Life's entangled, many shroud, And what remains now mysterious, Will at last be made plain—When we gather under heaven's Blue arches, and the trumpet sounds, Where the spirit feels no longing,
And the happy hour no ending.

TWO TRUANTS.
CHAPTER IV.
DOLLY'S DIEMMA.
When the ladies rose from the table Dolly had a brief reprieve. For once she blessed the succeeding hour, for once the gentleman responded to her looks.
She had sensed herself, with maiden modesty, in a dusky recess, contriving to hide her two sisters in the front of the screen. But in less than five minutes her mother, having inquired of Captain Lonsdale whether he were fond of music, and receiving an answer in the affirmative, forthwith summoned Dolly from her absence, and commanded her to play. The girl had an excess on the tip of her tongue.
Mrs. Thompson anticipated it.
"Some of the music of old Gulliver," she said authoritatively; "you know it perfectly." Dolly in dismay walked mechanically to the piano. As she took her seat, she had another inspiration. She played a chorus of Handel's. Her mother, who was aware,< ignored the petty distinction of taste between two and two.
When she rose, on concluding, she was confronted by Mr. Conner. The young duenna had come up to the piano to listen, and now had her at bay.
"Have you just played the second part of the finale to Donizetti's 'Lion of Arcy'?" he began.
"New brass! up, prim, starched and slightly shocked, and replied, in a deep low voice,
"We are a very serious people. You never go to the play. If it is an opera I calculate to see it, I probably do not know it."
Check! But Conner, moved by vague curiosity to return to charge, ventured, after a pause tentatively,
"Then do you think all dramatic representations wrong, objectionable?"
"If I object to them," said Dolly, "it is a tone calculated to close the conversation."
"I do not," he uttered, and hesitated; then, perceiving, "Still, I dare say your father, on such a point, would allow me to express a difference of opinion." The Bishop of St. Dunstan's, in a speech the other day, having been questioned on that very subject, gave expression to some most liberal views.
"They have not been adopted down here," said Dolly with a lurking grin that mystified his audience.
"A superficial acquaintance with the theoretical profession often leads people to condemn it entirely, when a more intelligent knowledge might bring them to quite different conclusions; he observed less confidently as her expression became more severe.
"You will scarcely persuade mamma," returned Dolly demurely; "but we ought to cultivate the society of actors and actresses, as we have only to do so in order to find out that all our ideas about them are quite wrong."
"Being in the best position to report," he urged, "and considering the change of being dragged down by its representatives, double acknowledgment is surely due to those who steadily uphold its dignity and good reports, whether actors or managers—Kean Jones or Bartwell at the Empire, or Laurie Smart at the Nonparley."
Dolly felt herself thrust strange coils with the name of her first lover on her tongue. She was not sure she should not have given up the idea of going to the theatre. Dolly, Captain Londale would like to see the Saxon antiquities that were dig up the other day. They are in the city. Will you go with him and show them?
However preoccupied, Dolly could not but perceive a tendency on her mother's part to promote the new acquaintance.
But she was too glad of her escape to quarrel with the manner of it; and she made her explanatory comments on the disappeared, and range as long winded as possible. When she returned with the Captain to the drawing-room, three candidates had retired to their apartments. He returned to his study, and found the other guests now left, and Dolly, exhausted, sank down on the sofa, feeling herself energetically will at the departed ones were reviewed by the ladies.
"What a remarkably nice man that Mr.
Conner is, really!" spoke her eldest sister.
"Do not think so," said Dolly, placidly.
"For my part, I can't understand how a man can be so talkative, so much at ease, just on the eve of his ordination."
"Oh, it became his, as well prepared, the other of the matter and diffidence from friends of him, papa says. He is certainly unconsciously clever." Dolly hoped she was cleverer still.

WORDS FAIL
Having been afflicted all my life with Sciapelloni's Sarsaparilla, I can say that it is the best medicine I ever used.
All the ailments of the blood are promptly removed by this remarkable remedy.
PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
Sold by all Druggists; or, in bottles for $5.

I am making up a party with the Grimshaw, and the Fashaw, and two of the Denney girls—Dolly and Agnes, who comes home today.
The Captain hesitated; but he was only gazing at the best way to repeat with dignity.
"Well since you are so kind," he began, I shall be very happy to make one. I should not have thought of going on my own account."
The programme were being scattered around the country over a distance of some twenty square miles. One morning Mr. Conner—at the country cursey where he was working like three of the ordinary mules, to the momentary satisfaction of his reitor, who felt that so intelligent, so popular, so musical a noisemaker, with high ecclesiastical connections too, was not long for the observance of Cleland's particularly post-a bill of the play from a former schoolfellow—a young cavalry officer, who had just joined at her St. Martin's depot—together with a note, asking him to come over for the evening, and offering him a stall for the entertainment, and a bed for the night.
Mr. Conner was loath to accept, without reading the programme. Just as he was closing his letter, his eye, falling on the programme, was caught by the first item:
"A HAPPY FAIR."
Perthshire. Major Wood.
Costume. "The first appearance of my day."
"May Black" is uttered with mixed feelings. "The girl I was so much taken with, the mother who talked so so brightly, and who, in the face, so exactly resembles that very serious daughter of the Dean of St. Martin's. How I should like to see her once more!"
"Resolution as to the programme." conscience saying, "Conquer, for what can you and a charming young actress have to do with each other, now?" Then the doubt cleared, as conscience got her answer: "Nothing, so; go; out on you, Conner, and so forward!" Consciousness to the occasion, and he posted his letter without further delay.
(To be continued in our next.)

Chicago, April 11.—A special from the City of Mexico says: "When the troops of the Columbian government finally entered Colon, after it had been burned by the rebels under the leadership of Preston, they captured several hundred prisoners. During the past ten days the number of these prisoners has been considerably augmented by the receipt of struggling soldiers captured in the surrounding districts.
It is not known how many of these prisoners were held prisoners in Colon, but good authorities place the number at about four hundred. Authentic information received from the city last night that on Wednesday officers of the Columbian government selected one hundred of the worst rebels imprisoned at Colon, and placing them in a boat, ordered their launch out into the bay, where the entire one hundred were thrown overboard and drowned.
Bar Rooms Closed in Portland.
Portland, Me., April 7.—The amended Liquor Law went into operation to-day in this State. For the first time, in many years all the drinking places here are effectively closed. The law is being rigorously enforced, and the drinking houses have closed their bars, and refuse to serve liquor to guests, even in their rooms.
The City Marshal and special police are constantly on the alert for violators of the law. Every railway train and steambath that arrives here is under the strictest surveillance.
One singular phase of the present liquor war is that no resistance has been made.
The liquor dealers have capitulated without a struggle. The City Marshal is determined to enforce the law and make Por-land a prohibition city. He is acting under instructions from the new Democratic Mayor.
Healthful Chinese in Canada.
Ottawa, April 13.—In the morning to-day, Chapman introduced a bill respecting and regulating Chinese immigration, providing (1st) for the imposition of a tax on each Chinese landing on any part of Canada, of $25 a head; (2nd), that the number of Chinese carried in vessels shall be not more than ten per cent. above the total number of the crew, and (3rd), that no Chinese landing on any part of Canada, shall be permitted to remain longer than five weeks in any one place, and that no Chinese landing on any part of Canada, shall be permitted to remain longer than five weeks in any one place, and
Canada, shall be permitted to remain longer than five weeks in any one place.
