

The Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security was founded in 1945 as a non-partisan, non-profit organization. Its purpose is to promote a better understanding of the international situation and to provide information and advice to the Canadian government and the public. The Institute's work is carried out through a variety of means, including research, publications, and public relations.

The Institute's research is carried out by a staff of scholars and experts in the field of international relations. The Institute also publishes a variety of materials, including books, pamphlets, and a quarterly journal. The Institute's public relations work is carried out through a variety of means, including lectures, seminars, and press releases.

The International Trade in Arms Problems and Prospects

A Conference Report
by
Keith Krause

Box of 100 copies
for the library

APR 28 1966

Information on this Institute and its publications may be obtained by writing to the Director, The Canadian Institute for International Peace and Security, 307 Glenview Street, Ottawa, Ontario K2P 6P9.

Keith Krause is an assistant professor at York University in Toronto where he teaches international relations, strategic studies, and Soviet foreign policy. While attending Oxford University, he wrote his doctoral thesis on international arms transfers.