La MARQUISE de FONTENOY Introductions Into Society and at Court Which Were Well Paid For—A Recent Elopement and the History Back of It

While one hears a good many stories of women of title who not only accept, but even demand and exact, large sums of money as the price of introducing Americans, and even natives, into smart society, it is relatively seldom that any one of them is ever brought to book. This is, however, what has just taken place at Dublin, in connection with some bankruptcy proceedings against Miss Cecilia Bell, of County Leitrim. Among the witnesses called by the counsel for the creditors were Sir Edward and Lady Bradstreet, the former a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin, a civil engineer, a county court judge of County Tyrone, and a descendant, through his mother, of the first Duke of Leinster, while Lady Bradstreet is of Italian origin, hailing from Algiers. The Bradstreets have been in Ireland since the days of Cromwell, from whom John Bradstreet, the founder of the family, obtained substantial grants of land in County Kilkenny. The baronetcy was inherited by George II. in the first half of the eighteenth century. Sir Edward is the seventh holder, and makes his home at Castella Cottage, an outskirts of Dublin. Examination of Sir Edward and Lady Bradstreet showed that Miss Bell, who had been a more casual acquaintance of the latter, was the daughter of a friend of the latter's, and that she was twenty-eight years of age, had taken up her residence with them, and had presented them with a pair of horses, a brougham and a Victoria, several thousand pounds worth of jewelry, costly carpets and hangings, besides checks of considerable size, payable to Sir Edward, to Lady Bradstreet, and to their twenty-year-old son, Gerald.

The Return Pressed for an explanation, both Sir Edward and especially Lady Bradstreet declared that these presents had been given in return for the latter's introduction of Miss Bell into all that was best in Dublin society, and for her presentation at the vice-regal court, that is to say, at Dublin Castle. The creditors demand that since Miss Cecilia Bell has been reduced to a condition of bankruptcy by her gifts to the Bradstreets, that the latter should make restitution for their benefit, and the presiding judge, Justice Boyd, adjourned the case for a fortnight or three weeks, in order to enable Sir Edward and Lady Bradstreet to make this restitution voluntarily, after giving them to thoroughly understand that unless this were done, he would issue an order compelling them. It is needless to add that the names of both Sir Edward and Lady Bradstreet will be stricken from the list of those who have access to Dublin Castle, as having been presented at the vice-regal court, and will likewise be barred from court in London, an intimation to this effect being quickly dispatched to England's ambassadors and ministers abroad, so as to prevent the same.

A Recent Elopement The Comte d'Abbadie d'Arrast, who created so great a sensation last May by eloping with his children's governess, Mlle Benoit, to Canada, whence on landing at Quebec, they were both deported back by the dominion authorities, has completely disappeared from sight since his return to Europe, and is generally believed to have made his way, with Mlle Benoit, to the Argentine Republic. Although all the leading French, English and American papers had stated reports at Liverpool to receive him on landing, and to keep track of him and of his companion, he seems to have outwitted them all, and absolutely refused to see his brother, Martial, who went on board the S. S. Manitoba in the Moncy, before she was declared, in order to communicate to the fugitive that his wife, like his family, had forgiven his escapade, and was awaiting his return home to herself and to their children. The affair would not have attracted nearly so much attention as it did, had

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON simple plan of sleeping on a pillow of feathers noticed that you occasionally ask for supply, cured of this nerve-racking complaint I would write to you. "Should any of your readers complain troubled with insomnia and the physician be doing a world of good by suggesting, after trying different remedies and under the dear Miss Cameron—Having no results, I finally tried the very suggestions from your readers, I tops, and much to my surprise was speedily cured. "Sometime ago I was great cal evils consequent thereto and to you of the same difficulty, you would derogating the usual doctoring whis scheme, which is all the better because it is devoid of drugs, and does not appear to leave any after effect which most drugs do. "I have recommended this plan to several friends who were similarly benefited. I would add, however, that a friend, a physician, tells me that different persons often require different treatment and that he never found two cases exactly alike. Nevertheless I firmly think the use of my pillows for this malady is worth a trial. "Three cheers for that man! "I don't know whether his remedy is valuable or not, but I do know that HE IS, because he is the kind of man the world needs more of, the kind of man who cannot make a discovery or receive a leading without feeling an obligation to pass it on to the rest of the world. I trust both his remedy and his example will prove of value."

Here is a suggestion for the "put-away" season from a clever housewife who is the mother of the neighborhood for her skill in the art of freshening and making over half worn clothes. "When I put away my winter dresses, always put them away clean, because it's easier to get the dirt out when they are clean than when they are soiled. It doesn't matter how much I hate to do it now—I'll hate it just as much in the fall. "I was asked me how it was I managed to make the children's half worn clothes look as good as new and what I started to say was this: Very often instead of sponging or naphtha cleaning our woolen clothes, I wash them in soap and water. "People seem to think that dark clothes don't get dirty because you don't see the dirt, but it's really there just the same, and I don't think it's healthy. Just imagine if you wore a white dress day in and day out all winter what it would look like. And then remember that the same amount of dirt is on your dark blue serge, only it doesn't show and it's enough to make you sick. And besides that it's dirt that rots clothes and makes them wear out more quickly. Now naphtha takes spots out but it doesn't clean things like soap and water. So when I have a dress to make over I rip it up and then wash the pieces thoroughly in soap and water. That's what makes my made-over things look new. Sometimes when I want to freshen up a dress that I'm not afraid of shrinking, I put it right in the tub just as it is and give it a good scrub. "I have been surprised at the wonders I've worked on old woolen clothes with soap and water. "Would be" is not the right way to express it. "Have been" would be much better."

not the Comte pretended to commit suicide, writing letters to the effect that he was about to drown himself in the Seine. There seemed to be confirmation of this story, through the discovery of a hat and a pair of shoes on the bank of the river. But before he had reached Canada, the ruse had been discovered. "D'Abbadie d'Arrast, is a tall, gaunt man, of very powerful, not to say Herculean frame, who had played a very important role in royalist and clerical circles at Evreux, a cathedral town in an exceedingly aristocratic section of Normandy. In fact, he was regarded by the government as one of the leaders of the royalist movement in the country. At the same time, and as such was an object of so much concern to the prefect or governor of the department, that he had a military escort of his best looking attaches to scrape up an acquaintance with and to become the suit of Mlle Benoit, the governess, in the hope of discovering through her some clue as to the instructions which Comte d'Abbadie had supposed to be receiving from the Duke of Orleans. Mlle Benoit seems to have made use of this young attaché in the manner of a puppet, the count for her, by means of jealousy. The Comtesse d'Abbadie d'Arrast is the wife of a French nobleman, the Comte of "Notre Dame de Lourdes," which, translated into almost every civilized language, is a book familiar to Catholics all over the world. It is doubtful, indeed, whether any book of the last hundred years has proved so great a monetary success in the way of royalties, despite its utter absence of any literary value.

A Miraculous Cure The way in which Henri Lasserre came to write it, was remarkable. He had been suffering for some time, and seeking relief in vain, inasmuch as he could get objects only as dim shadows. Ex-Premier de Freycinet, an old friend of his, in spite of being himself a Protestant, recommended to him, since he had tried every other relief in vain, to have recourse to Lourdes. Lasserre, whose father's name was Lasserre, and whose immediate ancestry is Semitic, followed the statesman's advice, wrote to the custodian of the fountain for half-a-dozen bottles of the miraculous water, made a general and particular confession of his sins to his spiritual adviser, and thereupon commenced to wash his eyes with the water. The application of the water resulted in immediate relief, and before the half-dozen bottles had been exhausted, his cure, which proved permanent, had become almost complete, leaving the patient in an ecstatic state of mind, which found expression in the book, in which he describes the miracle of the recovery of his sight. Already a rich man.

Catarrh Conquered

You know the loathsome offensiveness of a bad case of catarrh. You know that catarrh very often works its way down to the lungs, ending, perhaps, in consumption. You know that, even before it becomes severe or chronic, catarrh is most disagreeable. Why, then, let it run on, gradually getting worse? Possibly, like hundreds of others, you have been unable to find a cure that really cures. Then you haven't tried

Father Morrissey No. 26 This remarkably effective remedy, prescribed by the famous priest-physician, combines the advantages of both external and internal treatment. It includes tablets to purify the blood and a healing, strongly antiseptic saline to be applied inside the nostrils, directly to the affected parts. Even chronic catarrh soon yields to this combined treatment. The discharge is stopped, the diseased membrane healed, and colds no longer follow one another with monotonous regularity. Don't let that catarrh run on—get Father Morrissey's No. 26 and cure it. 50c. for the combined treatment—at your dealer's. 109 Father Morrissey Medicine Co., Ltd., MONTREAL, QUE.
