MONTON.

[Progress is for sale in Monton at the Monton Bookstore, by W. G. Staniel, J. T. Hall and M. B. Jones Bookstore.]

April 1.—The quiet passion week has settled down upon Monton, and the only event in the shape of an entertainment which I have recorded this week is the sacred concert given in the Central Methodist church on Monday evening when Mrs. Harrison drew, as she invariably does, a very large audience who gave her an enthusiastic reception, and listened spell-bound to a collection of their old favorites. It is one of the peculiarities of Mrs. Harrison that she seldom varies her programmes, and therefore her audiences have the advantage of knowing just exactly what they are going to hear, and familiarity with the different numbers increases their appreciation of them. Of course it might seem strange to those who are inclined to be critical that a singer of Mrs. Harrison's reputation, whose admirers consider her fully equal to Madame Albani, that the admission should have been placed at the extra price, but I understand it was done entirely from philanthropic reasons, in order that everyone should have an opportunity of hearing the Canadian Nightingale's voice more, before she sailed for Europe. Certainly her recital was a very great success many of her audience expressing the opinion that she had never been in better voice. Her three numbers "I Wish You Well," "Let the Bright Seraphim," and "I Will Exalt Thee" were beautifully sung and the catenae was given encore after encore, to all of which she graciously responded. Her "Dream of Bethlehem" with violin obligato by Miss Bruce, evoked rapturous applause, and her duet with Mr. J. H. Wetmore was one of the gems of the evening. The other soloists were Mr. Paul Lea and Mr. J. H. Wetmore, who is always a favorite with Monton audiences. Mr. Wetmore sang "Days of Days" to classic music, accompanied in splendid style, and Miss Wetmore sang the setting of "The Lost Chord" with excellent effect the choir forming a chorus for the last verse. Mrs. Harrison's closing numbers were given by request, and consisted of "The Fairies" and the "Song of the Lark," and to the regret of her audience, responded to a very enthusiastic encore by merely bowing. Professor J. H. Wetmore of the church played the accompaniment in his usual masterly manner, and gave Prof. Puffer's dead march, in memory of the late Sir Joseph Denny, with great effect.

Mrs. J. J. Taylor and daughter left town on Monday for their future home in Toronto, Nova Scotia, and I believe Mr. Taylor, who has been spending the past few days in town, will follow them this week. Mr. and Mrs. Taylor's departure will be a serious loss to our narrow circle, but their numerous friends will join in wishing them all happiness and prosperity in their new home.

THE DUKES OF DEVONSHIRE.

[Progress is for sale in the Dukes of Devonshire by W. T. H. Eddy and J. H. Hawthorne.]

April 1.—The Duke of Devonshire, the aristocratic instinct which distinguishes the English national character.

He has only been a Duke for a few years, his father, the seventh Duke, dying in December, 1891, at the age of eighty-three. The present Duke of Devonshire made his enviable political record as the Marquis of Hartington, a courtesy title, and he has been married less than five years, though he is sixty-two years old. There were two reasons for his remaining a bachelor so long. In the first place the seventh Duke of Manchester, who married the beautiful Countess Louise, daughter of Count Alter, didn't die until 1890, and, in the second place, the old Duke of Devonshire, who objected the Marquis taking a bride of sixty, thought he had waited for her many decades, lived a year and a half longer. Finally all obstacles were removed, however, and the marriage took place, notwithstanding the old Duke of Devonshire was well specially drawn to prevent it. This romantic affection was so far recognized by friends that for many years prior to the marriage no house party to which either went was considered complete without the other.

Like Joseph Chamberlain, the present Duke of Devonshire formerly was a sturdy Liberal—indeed, when Gladstone retired from public life in a fit of the sulks, just twenty years ago, the Duke (then Marquis), and a member of the House of Commons, was unanimously chosen leader of the Liberal party. When Gladstone got over his pet, Hartington was the first to welcome him, and became once more his loyal lieutenant. Like Mr. Chamberlain, he, too, deserted Gladstone when the latter took up Home Rule. The Duke now is leader of the Liberal Unionists in the House of Commons.

The Duke is pious in his way, but loves all kinds of sports. He often leaves Parliament during sittings to attend service at Westminster Abbey, but is as well known on the turf as in the sanctuary. He is fond of good eating and drinking, and is credited with getting as much enjoyment in life as most men, yet is always governed by a sense of duty.

No private residence in the world, it is asserted, compares with Chatsworth House in extent, internal decorations and artistic collections. It was built in 1702 by the first Duke of Devonshire. Five successive dukes have owned it, each wealthier than his predecessors, added to its treasures, and the sixth Duke spent a million on it.

To this sixth Duke of Devonshire attaches the chief romantic mystery of the Cavendish family. He inherited the titles and estates as the son of the beautiful Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire, to whom Coleridge paid a grand tribute in verse, one of the most remarkable women of her time. Though this son bore a striking resemblance to the fifth Duke, tradition asserts that the Duchess's only child was a daughter, whom she exchanged at birth for the son of a friend. Her reputed son never married. There is a

Sarsaparilla Sense

Any sarsaparilla is sarsaparilla. True. So any tea is tea. So any flour is flour. But grades differ. You want the best. It's so with sarsaparilla. There are grades. You want the best. If you understood sarsaparilla as well as you do tea and flour it would be easy to determine. But you don't. How should you? When you are going to buy a commodity whose value you don't know you pick out an old established house to trade with, and trust their experience and reputation. Do so when buying sarsaparilla.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been on the market 50 years. Your grandfather used Ayer's. It is a reputable medicine. There are many sarsaparillas — but only one Ayer's. It cures.

Still have doubts? Send for the "Curebook." It kills doubts and cures doubters. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.
